Show Time and th

by Tom Seppy, Associated Press

Planning for today's halftime festivities, featuring the Redskins Marching Band and the Redskinettes, began last January when the 10 people in charge of the programs held their first meeting.

They began going over the applications from the many high schools, colleges and other organizations that want to participate in a program during one of the Redskins' home games. Meetings like this are held until March.

Then comes the task of gathering additional information on the bands they have narrowed down to be among the ones they would like to see put on a show. The one big prerequisite for a band is that it have at least 100 members. You have to remember, D. C. Stadium is a large arena.

After the bands are chosen, there is the tedious task of planning the programs for each game in which precision and continuity are packaged into the 8½ or 9 minutes of the performance.

Songs need to be chosen, music arranged and costumes designed.

Halftime shows and football in America are somewhat synonymous.

And where else in the country could the spectacle of Americana be more appropriate than in the nation's capital?

Columnist Bob Considine, after seeing a Washington halftime sho in the early 1940's, wrote: "A Re skins game is something resem bling a fast-moving revue, with cues, settings, music, pace, tableaux and—hold your hats, boys a ballet.

"But the amazing part of it is that there's room left on program for a football game."

More than a quarter century later, the halftime show to be presented this afternoon carries m of the same qualities which displayed back in the early yea

The schedule for the curr year—a season that has m something new with the traditi —is a blend of variety.
