MERLIN (SN 79/152,818) – office action response

Section 2(d) refusal

Applicant Breitling S.A. (“Breitling”) responds to the office action in which the examining attorney issued a final refusal to register MERLIN in Class 14, citing a prior Class 25 registration of MERLIN (RN 4,483,252) for apparel and footwear.

Breitling continues to respectfully disagree with the basis for the refusal, and requests that its application be approved for publication. Breitling is also simultaneously filing a Notice of Appeal.

The final refusal does not provide a rationale as to why the average consumer would mistakenly think that a MERLIN watch emanates from the same source as the owner of the MERLIN registration for apparel or footwear. There is no evidence that the term MERLIN is unique to the registrant, or that the registrant’s use of MERLIN is sufficiently well-known to preempt registration of MERLIN in another class. There is no evidence that the registrant uses its mark in the U.S. at all for Class 25 goods.

The final refusal also fails to provide any evidence to support its conclusion that consumers are likely to associate Breitling’s MERLIN mark and Registrant’s MERLIN mark:

- The only real-world evidence provided in the final refusal consists of web pages showing that the names of two designers, KATE SPADE and MICHAEL KORS, appear on both apparel and watches. This evidence is redundant of the evidence in the initial refusal, which showed CALVIN KLEIN and RALPH LAUREN websites with both types of goods. The fact that famous designer names appear in both categories is not relevant to, or predictive of, how the public would react to a mark like MERLIN, which is neither a designer name nor at all unique to the registrant. While a consumer who sees the unique name of a famous clothing designer such as Kate Spade or Michael Kors on watches would assume that the clothing designer licensed his or her name for use on watches, there is no evidence to show that consumers would reach the same conclusion when encountering a more commonplace mark like MERLIN.
- Indeed, in the two cases Breitling cited in its previous office action response, the Board held that consumers are unlikely to perceive a relationship between Class 14 goods and Class 25 goods when—as in the present case—they are sold under a mark that is not obviously a designer name or apparel brand. See, e.g., In re Vetements Weill, 2005 TTAB LEXIS 500 (TTAB 2005) (not precedential) (“While the third-party registrations suggest that designer names may be used as marks for a variety of products, the record does not include evidence that any entity, other than a fashion designer, sells clothing and watches and jewelry under the same mark.

Thus, there simply is no probative evidence to establish that consumers are likely to believe that Applicant's clothing and registrant's watches and jewelry emanate from the same source.”). See also In re Thomas, 79 USPQ2d 1021 (TTAB 2006) (Board reversed a Section 2(d) refusal to register MARCHE NOIR for jewelry based on registration of BLACK MARKET for women’s clothing, finding that the goods were not closely related).

- The final refusal also cites five marks that happen to be registered in both Classes 14 and 25, just at the initial office action did, but provides no evidence that any of these marks is actually used for both types of goods, or that consumers would actually encounter both marks in the marketplace.

MERLIN is not a term coined by the cited registrant, but is best known as the name of the wizard in the King Arthur legend. Merlin has been the title of two different television series based on the legend, and the character has appeared in two current television series, Camelot and Once Upon A Time, the Broadway musical Camelot and the motion picture version of the musical, and multiple other motion pictures based on the Arthurian legend, including Excalibur and The Sword in the Stone. See Exhibit A. Not surprisingly, the exact mark MERLIN is not unique to the cited registrant Merlin Entertainments Group Operations Limited—it appears in 60 other active applications and registrations (see Exhibit B), and is incorporated with other wording in more than 100 other active federal marks. The average consumer will therefore understand MERLIN either as an allusion to the Arthurian figure, or as suggesting magic or wizardry, and is unlikely to identify MERLIN with any particular company. Consumers are particularly likely to view the registrant’s use of MERLIN in this manner—as indicated in Exhibit C, registrant is a theme park operator, and displays its MERLIN logo with a stylized M design intended to resemble a letter drawn in the air with a magic wand. Moreover, theme parks are commonly marketed to American purchasers as having “magical,” “otherworldly” qualities. See Exhibit D.

Breitling has shown that the registrant is obviously not a fashion designer or apparel company, that its registration is based on a foreign registration rather than U.S. use, and that its Class 25 identification of goods is an exhaustive list of over 50 items of apparel, including “cagoules, smock and salopettes.” There is no evidence that the mark has ever been used on any of these items, and therefore no basis to conclude that the registrant’s mark is distinctive, well-known, or otherwise entitled to broad protection beyond Class 25.

It’s quite clear that there is no per se rule that Class 14 watches and Class 25 apparel are related goods. See, e.g., In re Thomas, 79 USPQ2d 1021 (TTAB 2006). Indeed, watches/jewelry and apparel are fundamentally different products. Retailers commonly specialize in the sale of watches and/or jewelry, and such retailers do not sell apparel. Even when the same retailers sell both watches/jewelry and apparel, the products typically appear in completely different sections of the store, and are sold in different manners – most department stores and apparel stores, for example, display watches and jewelry in glass cases, and have trained clerks knowledgeable in watches and jewelry to provide customers with information about the products.

On countless occasions, the Trademark Office has agreed with Breitling's argument that the same mark can be registered by two different entities for Class 14 watches/jewelry and Class 25 goods:

- Breitling itself holds registrations of its AIRBORNE, EMERGENCY, COLT, and GALACTIC model names, which are identical to third party marks registered by other companies in Class 25. See Exhibit E.
- Many of the world's other leading watchmakers—including Citizen, Omega, Movado, Patek Philippe, Richemont, Rolex, Seiko, Swatch, TAG Heuer, Tissot, and Zenith—have all registered marks in Class 14 that are identical to Class 25 marks owned by others. A chart summary of these marks is attached as Exhibit F. As shown in Exhibit G, 25 of these marks are currently in use as model names for specific watches, similar to the manner in which Breitling intends to use MERLIN.
- The Trademark Office has allowed two different parties to register marks which are the name of another Arthurian character (GUINEVERE) or the names of mythical figures (HERCULES, ATHENA, APHRODITE). See Exhibit H.

With respect to the marks that appear in Exhibit F, the Trademark Office takes the position that, even though the Trademark Office has essentially agreed with Breitling's position on over 40 separate occasions, these prior decisions have "little evidentiary value." The Trademark Office makes this argument, despite the fact that nearly all of its own evidence of the relationship between Class 14 and Class 25 goods is comprised of third party registrations covering Class 14 watches and Class 25 apparel. Obviously, then, third party registrations are at least somewhat relevant to determining the relationship between Class 14 watches and Class 25 apparel.

The Trademark Office indicates that nearly half of the sets of registrations and applications relied upon by Breitling are irrelevant, because they involve at least one mark that was registered or approved without an allegation of use. However, the registrant in this case obtained its Class 25 registration through a Madrid application—indeed, as Breitling noted in its previous office action response, Registrant's Class 25 identification covers over 50 different goods, and it does not appear to actually use the mark for Class 25 goods. It's therefore difficult to understand how these prior determinations are irrelevant to the present case, when the fact situation is identical. In any event, as shown in Exhibit G, Breitling has now shown that at least 25 of the Class 14 marks that it cited in its original office action response are indeed in use.

Even if these coexisting registrations and applications are not evidence that different parties actually use identical marks for watches and apparel, they reflect the perception of other members of the examining corps as to consumer behavior. In each of the occasions that Breitling cites, the examiner concluded that a Class 14 mark and a Class 25 mark could coexist because there was no obvious reason why consumers would associate the two marks. While these decisions obviously do not bind the examining attorney, they are nevertheless instructive, suggesting that others would not perceive a connection between Class 14 and 25 when the marks are not the names of fashion designers, but rather arbitrary or suggestive nouns like STILETTO, COMMANDER, or CATWALK.

In sum, there is no evidence to support the premise that a consumer encountering a Breitling MERLIN watch would assume that the product emanates from the owner of a registration of MERLIN for clothing. Breitling respectfully requests that the examining attorney reverse the refusal.

Merlin

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Merlin is a legendary figure best known as the wizard featured in Arthurian legend. The standard depiction of the character first appears in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Regum Britanniae, written c. 1136, and is based on an amalgamation of previous historical and legendary figures. Geoffrey combined existing stories of Myrddin Wyllt (Merlinus Caledonensis), a North Brythonic prophet and madman with no connection to King Arthur, with tales of the Romano-British war leader Ambrosius Aurelianus to form the composite figure he called Merlin Ambrosius (Welsh: Myrddin Emrys). He is allegedly buried in the Broceliande forest, near Paimpont in Brittany.

Geoffrey's rendering of the character was immediately popular, especially in Wales.<sup>[1]</sup> Later writers expanded the account to produce a fuller image of the wizard. Merlin's traditional biography casts him as a cambion: born of a mortal woman, sired by an incubus, the non-human from whom he inherits his supernatural powers and abilities.<sup>[2]</sup> The name of Merlin's mother is not usually stated but is given as Adhan in the oldest version of the Prose Brut.<sup>[3]</sup> Merlin matures to an ascendant sagehood and engineers the birth of Arthur through magic and intrigue.<sup>[4]</sup> Later authors have Merlin serve as the king's advisor until he is bewitched and imprisoned by the Lady of the Lake.<sup>[4]</sup>

Name and etymology

The name "Merlin" derives from the Welsh Myrddin, the name of the bard Myrddin Wyllt, one of the chief sources for the later legendary figure. Geoffrey of Monmouth Latinised the name to Merlinus in his works. The medievalist Gaston Paris suggests that Geoffrey chose the form Merlinus rather than the regular Merdinus to avoid a resemblance to the Anglo-Norman word merde (from Latin merda), for faeces.<sup>[5]</sup>

Clas Myrddin, or Merlin's Enclosure, is an early name for Great Britain stated in the Third Series of Welsh Triads.<sup>[6]</sup> The Celticist A. O. H. Jarman suggests the Welsh name Myrddin (Welsh pronunciation: [ˈmərðɪn]) was derived from the toponym Caerfyrddin, the Welsh name for the town known in English as Carmarthen.<sup>[7]</sup> This contrasts with the popular but false folk etymology that the town was named for the bard. The name Carmarthen derives from the town's previous Roman name, Moridunum,<sup>[5][7]</sup> itself derived from Celtic Brittonic **moridunon*, "sea fortress."<sup>[8]</sup>

Geoffrey's sources

Geoffrey's composite Merlin is based primarily on Myrddin Wyllt, also called Merlinus Caledonensis, and Aurelius Ambrosius, a mostly fictionalised version of the historical war leader Ambrosius Aurelianus.<sup>[9]</sup> The former had nothing to do with Arthur: in British poetry he was a bard driven mad after witnessing the horrors of war, who fled civilization to become a wild man of the wood in the 6th century.<sup>[10]</sup> Geoffrey had this individual in mind when he wrote his earliest surviving work, the Prophetiae Merlini (Prophecies of Merlin), which he claimed were the actual words of the legendary madman.

Geoffrey's Prophetiae do not reveal much about Merlin's background. When he included the prophet in his next work, Historia Regum Britanniae, he supplemented the characterisation by attributing to him stories about Aurelius Ambrosius, taken from Nennius' Historia Brittonum. According to Nennius, Ambrosius was discovered when the British king Vortigern was trying to erect a tower. The tower always collapsed before completion, and his wise men told him the only solution was to sprinkle the foundation with the blood of a child born without a father. Ambrosius was rumoured to be such a child, but when brought before the king, he revealed the real reason for the tower's collapse: below the foundation was a lake containing two dragons who fought a battle representing the struggle between the Saxons and the Britons, which struggle suggested that the tower would never stand under the leadership of Vortigern, but only under that of Ambrosius. (This is why Ambrosius is 'given' the kingdom, or the 'tower' -- he tells Vortigern to go elsewhere and says 'I will stay here'. The tower is metaphorically the kingdom, which is the notional ability to beat the Saxons.) Geoffrey retells this story in Historia Regum Britanniae with some embellishments, and gives the fatherless child the name of the prophetic bard, Merlin. He keeps this new figure separate from Aurelius Ambrosius and, with regard to his changing of the original Nennian character, he states that Ambrosius was also called 'Merlin', that is, 'Ambrosius Merlinus'. He goes on to add new episodes that tie Merlin into the story of King Arthur and his predecessors, such as the bringing of the stones for Stonehenge from Preseli Hills in south-west Wales and Ireland.

Geoffrey dealt with Merlin again in his third work, Vita Merlini. He based the Vita on stories of the original 6th-century Myrddin. Though set long after his time frame for the life of "Merlin Ambrosius", he tries to assert the characters are the same with references to King Arthur and his death as told in the Historia Regum Britanniae.

Merlin Ambrosius, or Myrddin Emrys

Geoffrey's account of Merlin Ambrosius' early life in the Historia Regum Britanniae is based on the story of Ambrosius in the Historia Brittonum. He adds his own embellishments to the tale, which he sets in Carmarthen, Wales (Welsh: Caerfyrddin). While Nennius' Ambrosius eventually reveals himself to be the son of a Roman consul, Geoffrey's Merlin is begotten on a king's daughter by an incubus. The story of Vortigern's tower is essentially the same; the underground dragons, one white and one red, represent the Saxons and the British, and their final battle is a portent of things to come.

At this point Geoffrey inserts a long section of Merlin's prophecies, taken from his earlier Prophetiae Merlini. He tells only two further tales of the character. In the first, Merlin creates Stonehenge as a burial place for Aurelius Ambrosius. In the second, Merlin's magic enables Uther Pendragon to enter into Tintagel in disguise and father his son Arthur with his enemy's wife, Igraine. These episodes appear in many later adaptations of Geoffrey's account. As Lewis Thorpe notes, Merlin disappears from the narrative after this; he does not tutor and advise Arthur as in later versions.<sup>[4]</sup>

Later adaptations of the legend

"Merlinus" in the Nuremberg Chronicle (1493)

Several decades later, the poet Robert de Boron retold this material in his poem Merlin.

Only a few lines of the poem have survived, but a prose retelling became popular and was later incorporated into two other romances. In Robert's account, as in Geoffrey's Historia, Merlin is begotten by a demon on a virgin as an intended Antichrist. This plot is thwarted when the expectant mother informs her confessor Blaise of her predicament; they immediately baptize the boy at birth, thus freeing him from the power of Satan. The demonic legacy invests Merlin with a preternatural knowledge of the past and present, which is supplemented by God, who gives the boy a prophetic knowledge of the future.

Robert de Boron lays great emphasis on Merlin's power to shapeshift, on his joking personality, and on his connection to the Holy Grail. This text introduces Merlin's master Blaise, who is pictured as writing down Merlin's deeds, explaining how they came to be known and preserved. Robert was inspired by Wace's Roman de Brut, an Anglo-Norman adaptation of Geoffrey's Historia. Robert's poem was rewritten in prose in the 12th century as the Estoire de Merlin, also called the Vulgate or Prose Merlin. It was originally attached to a cycle of prose versions of Robert's poems, which tells the story of the Holy Grail: brought from the Middle East to Britain by followers of Joseph of Arimathea, the Grail is eventually recovered by Arthur's knight Percival.

The Prose Merlin contains many instances of Merlin's shapeshifting. He appears as a woodcutter with an axe about his neck, big shoes, a torn coat, bristly hair, and a large beard. He is later found in the forest of Northumberland by a follower of Uther's disguised as an ugly man and tending a great herd of beasts. He then appears first as a handsome man and then as a beautiful boy. Years later, he approaches Arthur disguised as a peasant wearing leather boots, a wool coat, a hood, and a belt of knotted sheepskin. He is described as tall, black and bristly, and as seeming cruel and fierce. Finally, he appears as an old man with a long beard, short and hunchbacked, in an old torn woolen coat, who carries a club and drives a multitude of beasts before him (Loomis, 1927).

The Prose Merlin later came to serve as a sort of prequel to the vast Lancelot-Grail, also known as the Vulgate Cycle. The authors of that work expanded it with the Vulgate Suite du Merlin (Vulgate Merlin Continuation), which describes King Arthur's early adventures. The Prose Merlin was also used as a prequel to the later Post-Vulgate Cycle, the authors of which added their own continuation, the Huth Merlin or Post-Vulgate Suite du Merlin.

A giant helps Merlin build Stonehenge. From a manuscript of the Roman de Brut by Wace (British Library, Egerton 3208)

In the Livre d'Artus, Merlin enters Rome in the form of a huge stag with a white fore-foot. He bursts into the presence of Julius Caesar and tells the emperor that only the wild man of the woods can interpret the dream that has been troubling him. Later, he returns in the form of a black, shaggy man, barefoot, with a torn coat. In another episode, he decides to do something that will be spoken of forever. Going into the forest of Brocéliande, he transforms himself into a herdsman carrying a club and wearing a wolf-skin and leggings. He is large, bent, black, lean, hairy and old, and his ears hang down to his waist. His head is as big as a buffalo's, his hair is down to his waist, he has a hump on his back, his feet and hands are backwards, he's hideous, and is over 18 feet tall. By his arts, he calls a herd of deer to come and graze around him (Loomis, 1927).

These works were adapted and translated into several other languages. The Post-Vulgate Suite was the inspiration for the early parts of Sir Thomas Malory's English language Le Morte d'Arthur. Many later medieval works also deal with the Merlin legend. Italy's The Prophecies of Merlin contains long prophecies of Merlin (mostly concerned with 13th-century Italian politics), some by his ghost after his death. The prophecies are interspersed with episodes relating Merlin's deeds and with various Arthurian adventures in which Merlin does not appear at all. The earliest English verse romance concerning Merlin is Arthur and Merlin, which drew from the chronicles and the French Lancelot-Grail.

As the Arthurian myths were retold and embellished, Merlin's prophetic aspects were sometimes de-emphasised in favour of portraying him as a wizard and elder advisor to Arthur. On the other hand, in the Lancelot-Grail it is said that Merlin was never baptized and never did any good in his life, only evil. Medieval Arthurian tales abound in inconsistencies.

A manuscript found in Bath from the 1420s simply records a "Merlyn" as having helped Uther Pendragon with his "sotleness" or subtleness, presumably but not necessarily magic. His role could be embellished and added to that of Aurelianus Ambrosius, or he could be made into one of old Uther's favourite advisors and naught more.

In the Lancelot-Grail and later accounts, Merlin's eventual downfall came from his lusting after a huntress named Niviane (or Nymue, Nimue, Niniane, Nyneue, or Viviane in some versions of the legend), who was the daughter of the king of Northumberland. In the Suite du Merlin,<sup>[11]</sup> for example, Niviane is about to depart from Arthur's court, but, with some encouragement from Merlin, Arthur asks her to stay in his castle with the queen. During her stay, Merlin falls in love with her and desires her. Niviane, frightened that Merlin might take advantage of her with his spells, swears that she will never love him unless he swears to teach her all of his magic. Merlin consents, unaware that throughout the course of her lessons, Niviane will use Merlin's own powers against him, forcing him to do her bidding.<sup>[11]</sup>

When Niviane finally goes back to her country, Merlin escorts her. However, along the way, Merlin receives a vision that Arthur is in need of assistance against the schemes of Morgan le Fay. Niviane and Merlin rush back to Arthur's castle, but have to stop for the night in a stone chamber, once inhabited by two lovers. Merlin relates that when the lovers died, they were placed in a magic tomb within a room in the chamber. That night, while Merlin is asleep, Niviane, still disgusted with Merlin's desire for her, as well as his demonic heritage, casts a spell over him and places him in the magic tomb so that he can never escape, thus causing his death.<sup>[11]</sup>

Merlin's death is recounted differently in other versions of the narrative; the enchanted prison is variously described as a cave (in the Lancelot-Grail), a large rock (in Le Morte d'Arthur), an invisible tower, or a tree. In his book "The Meaning of Trees: botany, history, healing, lore" Fred Hageneder writes on page 149:

Merlin and Vivian in Legends & Romances of Brittany by Lewis Spence, illustrated by W. Otway Cancell

Nimue, the Lady of the Lake, shown holding the infatuated Merlin trapped and reading from a book of spells, in The Beguiling of Merlin by Edward Burne-Jones

According to Breton legend, the legendary wise man Merlin climbed the Pine of Barenton (from bel nemeton, "Sacred Grove of Bel"), just as shamans climb the World Tree. Here, he had a profound revelation and he never returned to the mortal world. In later versions, Merlin's glas tann was mistranslated as a "glass house". It is actually a living tree (from the Cornish glas "(ever)green", and tann, "sacred tree"), and from these words the name of Glastonbury, in Somerset, England is sometimes derived. Hence, according to legend, it is a sacred tree in which the soul of Merlin awaits his return.

In the Prophetiae Merlini, Niviane confines him in the forest of Brocéliande with walls of air, visible as mist to others but as a beautiful tower to him (Loomis, 1927). This is unfortunate for Arthur, who has lost his greatest counselor. Another version has it that Merlin angers Arthur to the point where he beheads, cuts in half, burns, and curses Merlin.

A main belt asteroid is named 2598 Merlin in honour of the legendary wizard.

Possible historicity

Nikolai Tolstoy<sup>[12]</sup> hypothesizes that Merlin is based on a historical personage, probably a 6th-century Druid living in southern Scotland. His argument is based on the fact that early references to Merlin describe him as possessing characteristics which modern scholarship (but not that of the time the sources were written) would recognize as Druidical - the inference being that those characteristics were not invented by the early chroniclers, but belonged to a real person. If so, the hypothetical Merlin would have lived about a century after the hypothetical historical Arthur.

A late version of the Annales Cambriae (dubbed the "B-text", written at the end of the thirteenth century AD) and influenced by Geoffrey of Monmouth's fictional Historia Regum Britanniae,<sup>[13]</sup> records for the year AD 573, that after "the battle of Arfderydd, between the sons of Eliffer and Gwenddolau son of Ceidio; in which battle Gwenddolau fell; Merlin went mad". The earliest version of the Annales Cambriae entry (in the "A-text", written c. 1100 AD), as well as a later copy (the "C-text", written towards the end of the thirteenth century AD) do not mention Merlin.<sup>[14]</sup>

Camelot (musical)

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Camelot is a musical by Alan Jay Lerner (book and lyrics) and Frederick Loewe (music). It is based on the King Arthur legend as adapted from the T. H. White novel The Once and Future King.

The original 1960 production, directed by Moss Hart and orchestrated by Robert Russell Bennett and Philip J. Lang, ran on Broadway for 873 performances, winning four Tony Awards and spawning several revivals, foreign productions, and the 1967 film Camelot. The original cast album was America's top-selling LP for 60 weeks.<sup>[1]</sup> The musical has become associated with the Kennedy Administration, which is sometimes referred to as the Camelot era.

CRAFTED AROUND EXPERIENCE

The Rolex Explorer benefited from experience gained in the Himalayas, acquiring its clearly distinctive hour and minute hands, and its landmark, highly legible, black dial with luminescent indices and large Arabic numerals at 3, 6 and 9 o'clock. It is designed for optimal legibility even in the dark – a crucial feature for explorers.

Model features
GOLDUST DREAM DIAL

Gem-setters, like sculptors, finely carve the precious metal to hand-shape the seat in which each gemstone will be perfectly lodged. With the art and craft of a jeweller, the stone is placed and meticulously aligned with the others, then firmly secured in its gold or platinum setting. Besides the intrinsic quality of the stones, several other criteria contribute to the beauty of Rolex gem-setting: the precise alignment of the height of the gems, their orientation and position, the regularity, strength and proportions of the setting as well as the intricate finishing of the metalwork. A sparkling symphony to enhance the watch and enchant the wearer.

Model features
PEARLMASTER BRACELET

The design, development and production of Rolex bracelets and clasps, as well as the stringent tests they face, involve advanced high technology. And, as with all the components of the watch, aesthetic controls by the human eye guarantee impeccable beauty. Both sensual and sophisticated, this solid gold bracelet with rounded five-piece links was created in 1992 for the launch of the Pearlmaster model. The Pearlmaster bracelet is always fitted with a concealed Crownclasp.
