Stephanie Hayes came out of the womb wearing high heels. While other kids were reciting multiplication tables, she was learning to calculate an extra third off the half-price discount during buy-one-get-one week. She loves animal prints, black mascara and anything that sparkles. She objects to visible party lines, Crocs and anything that costs more than a car payment. And she doesn't drive a nice car. She can be reached at (727) 893-8857 or shayes@tampabay.com.

As if we didn't have enough reasons to admire Kate, Kate Middleton, not-quite Princess Kate, Kate Duchess of Cambridge, Pippa's sister, (take THAT, Search Engine Optimization!), she is making being laden with child look easy, like a trip to a Paris bistro in the middle of May, like a stroll through the park on a summer's afternoon. We know it's not REALLY like that. Kate has famously had a pretty uncomfortable pregnancy with loads of sickness, so it's good to see her out and about smiling.

She of course set off an international frenzy Friday when she and the hubs toured Warner Brothers Studio near London, scouting out Harry Potter props in a polka dot dress from british brand Topshop, priced less than $60. The UK Mail Online reports that the frock has already sold out. No surprise there. Her jacket, we hear, is Ralph Lauren.

Polka dots just happen to be one of my favorites. There are many, many, MANY differences between the Duchess and I, not the least of which is about nine inches of leg and a husband who is a prince. But I am proud to say we were on some kind of polka dot wavelength this week. I wore my pink polka dot Lauren Conrad for Kohl's dress Monday, coupled with a pair of silver and black Chinese Laundry polka dot shoes (see the picture in the slideshow above). At first, when I put on the dress, I thought, "There's no way I could wear my polka dot shoes at the SAME TIME." And then I said to myself, "I can do whatever I want, YOLO." And so it came to pass.

Dots are a retro look, flattering on just about anyone because they camo a host of sins or boldly call attention to your rhd baby bump. They say, "I'm down for a soda pop! Let's share a straw!" Since the Topshop frock is already dunzo, check out a few alternatives from Forever 21, Old Navy, ModCloth and JCP in the slideshow.

I hope Kate is genuinely feeling good and not just putting on a brave face while the funky smells from that big Hagrid suit make her insides churn for dear life. We stand with you, Kate.

Katie Sanders foolishly spurned pretty dresses and shoes as a child, tossing new clothes over her shoulder at birthday parties with a totally rude "no, thank you." Her drab days of monocolored outfits are over now, and she certainly knows better than to turn down free stuff. Her wardrobe mixes classic with quirk. Think blazers with statement necklaces, and lots of patterned ballet flats. She can be reached at 850) 224-7563 or ksanders@tampabay.com.

Kameel Stanley has never encountered a thrift store she didn't like. Her mother taught her that the true value of clothes isn't how much they cost, but how many outfits one can create from them. Having grown up in Michigan, she was delighted to learn upon moving to Florida that she almost never needed to wear socks or boots again. There's a lot of turnover in her closet, and she's obsessed with dresses, necklaces and wedge heels. She can be reached at (727) 893-8643 or kstanley@tampabay.com.

A disciple of the little black dress classics school, Letitia Stein stretches her budget by looking for styles with staying power. She lives for 80 percent off shoes at DSW, floral sundresses and bohemian chic tops. She confesses to being a bit of a snob when it comes to handbags and jewelry. She can be reached at (813) 226-2400 or lstein@tampabay.com.

From camo pants and construction boots to sundresses, sweaters and sling backs, Keyonna Summers knows how to make all of it rock - at rock bottom prices. A Detroit native, Keyonna delves into her urban roots to find fashion pairings that give a nod to street fashion while maintaining the class of the modern, professional woman. She believes in searching for affordable clothes that look expensive and can easily be dressed up or down. You won't
