The National Fishing Heritage Centre is located in Grimsby, England and has been the center of the great fishing industry in England way back to the days of the Vikings.

The museum's main attraction is the fishing ship Ross Tiger, whose keel was laid in 1957 and then a fishing career of 35 years was retired in 1992 and preserved at the Heritage Centre. The little ship that could now needs upgrade on her hull and Princess Kate, ever the popular and supportive royal, was visiting to help build awareness and funds for the ship.

England's most loved royal couple will be having their baby in July. All must be going well. Kate has reported she feels the baby kicking. "Very much so," was Kate's reply when asked if she could feel the baby moving.

I don't know about you, but in July I plan on going to our local fish and chips outlet and downing an order in honor of a future queen (well, maybe a queen).

Princess Kate's due date revealed?

By Dylan Parent, 5/13/2013

A recent report from an insider reveals the royal baby is due July 13, during the Coronation Festival for Queen Elizabeth II.

The Daily Mail reports that the due date coincides with the Queen's Coronation Festival this summer, marking 60 years since her crowning.

News of the official due date comes from an unnamed friend of Prince William and Duchess Catherine, who revealed that the baby's arrival was discussed by family friends at a recent barbeque. "Everyone was very excited," the source dished to The Daily Mail. MSNBC.com adds that it is still unclear whether the royal baby is a boy or a girl. Rumors have swirled about the baby's gender since the duchess' pregnancy was announced this past December.

Many speculate that the baby is a boy. Such theories are supported by rumors that Kate has purchased a blue stroller, and that William's brother Harry has been speaking to friends about his excitement to become an uncle to a little prince.

While the baby's gender is remains a mystery, lovers of the royal family now have a hint as to when they can expect to meet its newest addition.
