She appeared in fewer episodes of the show in the second season, in part because her role on Showtime's Californication left her with less time. Still, she remained crucial to the series. The season ended, memorably, with Louie mishearing Pamela at the airport, thinking that maybe his love would finally be requited—a sad, funny note on which to end. Even better, I think, albeit less funny, was a scene earlier in the season, when Louie insisted on telling Pamela exactly how he felt—a scene that works in part because, as a viewer, I can totally understand why he would feel the way he does.
