onion, layers and layers of deeper and more sob-inducing bottoms, spiraling ever downwards."

It's like a televised Oak Island Money Pit of despair and stupidity. And every Now and then you turn up a wooden platform or piece of gold chain and you get all excited that there might be a huge treasure in there, but then the pit fills in with another thousand gallons of shit and you have to realize that it's just not worth the effort.

It's funny you mention confronting a terrifying world far larger than one's small horizon, because that's how I feel every time you let alert me to the existence of a show such as this. I'm covering in a speedily built pillow fort and brandishing a shovel as we speak, hoping that awareness of more shit like this doesn't come a-knockin'.

Someone please tell me what someone working on these shows makes? I'm talking about producer, director, writer (if applicable), etc because it's painfully obvious to me now that I'm in the wrong line of work.

I'll only watch if Harrison Ford shows up and kicks some ass.

Actually believe gangs in PA and MD have used Amish to move drugs up from Baltimore, along PA to Ohio.

A while back, an Amish family got killed by a drunk driver. What was confusing was the family was covered in high quality cocaine (this was back in the early 90's I believe). This led to a pretty big investigation in PA over Amish families who were basically drug muling for organized crime outfits.

I mean, who thinks to stop a horse and buggy?

Why have a national provider that doesn't cover you locally? At U.S. Cellular, we provide 4G LTE to nearly 90% of our customers. \(watch video\)

 You know, I actually find this news to be quite heartening. It's nice to know that even in a community like the Amish, there is still going to be a contingent of unfathomably stupid people whose actions have no relation to logic. It's not just a result of our depraved society. It's a human thing. And despite that, we have still managed not to blow ourselves up yet. Well done, us. Of course, our society is the one that then comes along and films it for entertainment, so don't be too proud.

 Go home, Discovery. You're drunk.

 It's weird, because just yesterday I was watching a trailer for a documentary on BBC Knowledge (a channel for docs, science shows etc over here in Africa), about a man who decides to "leave" the Amish community with his wife and kids and see what life is like in the outside world. One of the clips showed him with a DVD, and you could see the look of pure wonder on his face. And I think another part of the documentary was how he was going to deal with the shunning from his community if/when he decided to go back. That's the kind of shit Discovery Channel should be doing.

 You are not Amish if you condone violence. The Amish have different sets of morals, ethics, and values than the normal society we all live in. I have friends that are Amish, and this is a disgrace to their religion and their society.

 Pathetic Gold Diggers, loggers, chopper builders, now Amish perpetrators; the Discovery Channel has become 'The White Male Trailer Trash' channel. They got rid of all the stuff that was the slightest bit interesting to anyone with an IQ over 90.

You also have a long list of dumb comments. Shouldnt you be doing something other than beating off to tv like get a job. You are disgraceful

Manny - 2 years ago
These aren't even Amish people...this is TELEVISION..just like every other "reality" show.

 I fully agree with Shough610 regarding Oscar's rant - it perfectly sums up my opinion about this show. I live about 60 mi north of the Amish community in Ohio so I am familiar with the Amish. However, watching tonight's show and all the backbiting and double-dealing made me feel like I was watching "Dysasty - Amish Style"! I was watching the show trying not to laugh at the same time - I find this way of life contrary to everything I've known about the Amish - and amusing and unbelievable at the same time! That "Li Esther is a sneaky, manipulative gal, but also sharp! That Merlin character tonight -- Hell, I'm English in Ohio and I WOULDN'T even claim him! The guy is a joke - IF he was smart, he'd keep his yag SHUT and be much more subtle esp. at the car show. And John's greediness to advance in the Mafia and get a car has turned around and bitten him on the butt hard! Wouldn't want to be in HIS shoes with crazy Merlin on his behind! I must admit it - I am hooked and will keep on watching. Uhhh, Discovery Channel...just how LOW are you guys going to go? Everytime a new show comes out, just when you think you have see EVERYTHING, Disco scrapes to a new low, the "dumbing down" of America continues...God help us.

 Coming from Lancaster County I can say I have seen these people around the area dressed as Amish prior to any Amish TV shows ... but in reality there is no Amish Mafia, Fixers yes ... but not church sanctioned - Amish Keg parties, Amish pot fields, cars, computers just about anything the English do the Amish will do. I've even seen Amish men going into porn stores. The show does give a more realistic look into Amish life than most documentaries on the Amish have done in the past - Historical perspective likes to whitewash and water down the realities of life this is open and raw and does give you more of a realistic view of the Amish.
