How Much Are Your Balls Worth?

ANXIETY, DEPRESSION, FATHERHOOD, FERTILITY, HEALTH, OTHERS, TESTICULAR

At one point or other, most of us have said something like, "I'd give my balls if I could..." That always seems like a pretty safe comment. After all, chances are pretty slim that we'd actually have to sacrifice a testicle for whatever it is we want. And even if we did, we'd still have one left. So how much is one nut worth? Of course, everyone has his own prices. But I'm betting that it's usually going to be a hell of a lot more than $40,000—especially if it's your last one.

Unfortunately, $40,000 (£20,000) is the only compensation you'll get in the UK if one of their docs removes the wrong ball—something that's happened 56 times over the last 4 years alone. In the majority of cases, the man in question didn't need surgery at all, and in other cases, docs had to remove the second one as well. In one of the great understatements of all times, Roger Goss, co-director of Patient Concern for the National Health Service told The Sun newspaper, "It is amazing that surgeons don't always take enough care to

The Sun newspaper, it is amazing that surgeons don't always take enough care to guarantee that they are removing the correct testicle. Despite the huge total compensation bill, individual payments sound modest for wrecking men's lives.

The most common conditions that could require testicle removal are testicular torsion (where the tubes get twisted and cut off blood supply), hernia operations that accidentally cut off blood flow to the testicle, and testicular cancer, the most common cause of cancer in males 15-45.

So next time you get close to offering up one of your nuts for something really great, make sure you're getting your money's worth...

Exclusive! Lance Armstrong Exchanged Left Nut for Steroids

October 18, 2012

In the wake of Lance Armstrong's doping controversy, the cyclist has lost a Nike sponsorship, may lose his medals and he has even had to step down from his post of chairman of his Livestrong cancer charity. Now BSGossip has learned that the former champion traded his left nut in exchange for steroids. Many years ago, Armstrong approached respected steroid dealer Pump Pimp Yo about purchasing drugs. Pump Yo told us that when Armstrong asked what the drugs would cost him, he joked, "Everything you got plus your left nut." Surprisingly, Armstrong shook Pimp Yo's hand and said they had a deal. He paid the dealer millions and mailed him his left testicle through Fed Ex. Pimp Yo told us that he didn't know Armstrong would be having his left testicle surgically removed as part of his cancer treatment and wouldn't be needing it anyway. He said, "but then, he did cheat America so it shouldn't surprise anyone he cheated his dealer too."

Pimp Yo, who has now moved into the lucrative pot business, said he could have made a fortune selling the testicle on Ebay but since he's a respected professional, he would never do that. However Pimp Yo has made a hefty profit from his trade. "I inserted some marijuana seeds into the testicle and placed it in soil. Soon, I was growing the most pristine marijuana product I have ever created and sold it at a premium price. Damn! I have broken the product I have ever sampled and sold it at a premium price. Recently I have broken the testicle into various pieces to grow more product faster. It took a while to cut it open though; it was a tough nut to crack."
