IN THE UNITED STATES PATENT AND TRADEMARK OFFICE

Applicant.	)

FIRST DECLARATION OF STEPHEN RODGERS

1. My name is Stephen Rodgers. I am Vice-President Administration of Hearst Magazines Division of Hearst Communications Inc. ("HCI"). The information set forth in this declaration is based on my personal knowledge and on documents maintained in the ordinary course of business by employees of HCI and Hearst Magazines Property, Inc. ("HMPI").

2. During the pendency of this litigation, the registrations owned by HMPI that were submitted under cover of Opposers' original notice of reliance have been assigned to HCI in a transaction recorded at reel and frame no. 3034/0151. HCI therefore has become the single party in interest on the Opposers' side. True and accurate copies of registrations that reflect this change of ownership appear as Exhibits 1-8 of Opposer's Second Notice of Reliance.

3. HCI publishes Cosmopolitan and Cosmo Girl! magazines, and is the owner of the federally registered COSMOPOLITAN and COSMO GIRL! trademarks and service marks. These magazines discuss topics of interest to young women and girls, including shopping, health and beauty care, dating advice and stories, advice and information on career paths, personal growth, and entertainment news. Cosmopolitan magazine cultivates an image of its readership as composed of "fun, fearless females" between the ages 18 and 34, while Cosmo Girl! magazine relies on girls between 12 and 17 for its circulation and uses the slogan "Born to Lead" to describe its readership.

4. Both Cosmopolitan and Cosmo Girl! magazines have been in continuous general circulation since well prior to the filing date of Mr. Wilson's application to register the COSMO.COM service mark. In particular, Cosmopolitan was introduced in 1886 and currently is published in over 25 languages and sold in more than 41 countries, making it the largest monthly magazine franchise in the world.

5. Cosmo Girl! magazine was introduced in 1999. Like its sister magazine, Cosmopolitan, Cosmo Girl! magazine has become famous and well-known. In 2000, it was named "Startup of the Year" by ADWEEK magazine and was named to ADVERTISING AGE's "A List," which designated it among the top three magazines of 2003.

6. In 1998, the year before Mr. Wilson's application was filed, Cosmopolitan magazine had a monthly average circulation in excess of 2,675,000. Cosmo Girl! had a monthly average circulation in the year 2000 in excess of 604,000. Since 1991, HCI and its predecessors have circulated in the aggregate over half a billion copies of Cosmopolitan magazine and Cosmo Girl! magazine.

7. References to the COSMOPOLITAN mark are often abbreviated by HCI and the public as COSMO. By the same token, and as reflected in Tabs 25-75 of Exhibit C to Opposer's Notice of Reliance and Exhibits 9-15 to Opposer's Second Notice of Reliance, COSMO often is used as a shorthand reference to Cosmopolitan magazine. In addition, the magazines and the general public alike often refer to the magazines' readership as "Cosmo Girls." The public therefore associates the term COSMO with HCI. Indeed, the immediate success of Cosmo Girl!

magazine was in substantial part due to the close association of the term COSMO with Cosmopolitan magazine and with HCI.

8. An integral part of the revenue enjoyed by HCI comes from the advertising of a wide variety of goods and services in HCI's magazines. Examples of recent COSMO SHOPPING pages from Cosmopolitan magazine featuring these advertisements appear as Exhibits 11-15 to Opposer's Second Notice of Reliance.

9. The COSMO GIRL mark is the subject of Registration No. 2,527,954 for a "general interest magazine for girls and young women," which is owned by HCI. The COSMOPOLITAN mark is the subject of Registration No. 630,028, issued for a "magazine or periodical published monthly or at other intervals," which is also owned by HCI.

10. In addition to the registrations described above, HCI also is the owner of the following registrations, copies of which have been submitted under cover of Opposers' First Notice of Reliance:

Mark	Goods & Services	Date of Registration
COSMOPOLITAN Reg. No. 1,685,161	Pre-recorded video tapes and video cassettes on the subjects of exercise and beauty in International Class 9	May 5, 1992
COSMOPOLITAN Reg. No. 1,911,389	Books of general interest in International Class 16	August 15, 1995
COSMOPOLITAN Reg. No. 1,855,579	Eye glasses and eye glass frames in International Class 9	September 27, 1994
COSMOPOLITAN Reg. No. 2,178,873	Hair ornaments, namely, barrettes, ribbons, bands and bows in International Class 26	August 4, 1998
COSMOPOLITAN	Brushes in International	March 30, 1999

Mark	Goods & Services	Date of Registration
Reg. No. 2,235,977	Class 21
COSMOPOLITAN Reg. No. 2,304,917	Hand held electric hair dryers in International Class 11 and electric hair curling irons in International Class 9	December 28, 1999

11. As a communications company, HCI is very active on the Internet. In particular, HCI has continuously operated websites at the addresses www.cosmopolitan.com and www.cosmogirl.com since 1996 and 1999, respectively. Examples of material from these websites appear as Exhibits 8-9 to Opposer's Second Notice of Reliance.

12. HCI is the owner of two registrations for computer services: (1) Reg. No. 2,518,660 of COSMOPOLITAN.COM, issued on December 11, 2001 for "computer services, namely providing an interactive on-line computer database featuring portions of various magazines and articles and illustrative materials in the fields of personal relationships, beauty and fashion, health and fitness, personal hygiene, stars and entertainment news, and life and work, rendered by means of a global computer network"; and (2) Reg. No. 2,407,134 of COSMO GIRL!, issued on November 21, 2000, for "providing an interactive on-line computer database featuring portions of various magazines and articles and illustrative materials in the fields of personal relationships, beauty and fashion, health and fitness, personal hygiene, stars and entertainment news, and life and work, rendered by means of a global computer network."

13. As reflected in Exhibits 16 and 17 to Opposer's Second Notice of Reliance, HCI's websites feature online service mark uses of the COSMO, COSMOPOLITAN, and COSMO GIRL! marks in connection with shopping, shopping sprees, beauty, health, and other areas of interest. These include such features styled as COSMO QUIZ, COSMO SURVEYS, CONFESS

TO COSMO, COSMO EXCLUSIVE, and COSMO FASHION, the first two of which also appears in HCI's Cosmopolitan magazine. The websites have continuously featured these marks since the websites' inception.

14. Taken together, HCI's COSMOPOLITAN, COSMO, COSMO SHOPPING, COSMO GIRL, COSMO GIRL!, COSMO QUIZ, COSMO SURVEYS, CONFESS TO COSMO, COSMO EXCLUSIVE, and COSMO FASHION, COSMOPOLITAN.COM, and COSMO GIRL! marks constitute a family of COSMOPOLITAN and COSMO marks. Beginning over a hundred years ago, HCI and its predecessors in interest have expended considerable sums of money into developing consumer brand recognition for their family of COSMO and COSMOPOLITAN marks. In 2005 alone, HCI and its licensees expended in excess of $16,230,000 promoting the sale of goods and services under HCI's and HMPI's family of COSMO and COSMOPOLITAN marks. In 1998, the year before the filing of Mr. Wilson's application, that figure was in excess of $11,540,000.

The undersigned, being hereby warned that willful false statements and the like so made are punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, under 18 U.S.C. § 1001, declares that the facts set forth in this declaration are true; all statements made of his own knowledge are true; and that all statements made on information and belief are believed to be true.

Cosmo Listens to Records

Gianna d'Angelo

What began as a "joke" has ended in a spectacularly successful career for opera star Gianna d'Angelo. An American widely acclaimed as a leading coloratura, young, attractive Gianna is a rather unusual—and delightful—figure in a field many still think of as dominated by hefty Europeans.

Gianna was born in Connecticut where she began her career at an early age—three to be exact. "I used to sing little ditties around the house," she recalls, "so as a joke my parents entered me in a local singing contest. Much to their surprise, I won!"

She sang on radio for five years, but it wasn't until eight years later (at the age of eleven) that Gianna became interested in opera. She spent several years training in America before going to Italy to finish her studies. And, like most American singers, her first recognition came in Europe rather than in her own country. She made her debut at Rome's Baths of Caracalla in 1954, and her debut at the Metropolitan in 1961.

Speaking of the difficulty of beginning a career in the United States, Gianna said, "I think things are beginning to change in this country. There are many more opportunities nowadays for Americans right here—more local outlets, more grants. The new Metropolitan National Company (which will tour throughout the States) will be a wonderful proving ground for new talent. But I do think that European training and experience will always be necessary. It's the only way to learn the languages, and it's so important for the singer to know the meaning of every word he sings. It makes all the difference in interpretation."

Gianna has been hailed not only for her vocal interpretation of such roles as Gilda in Rigoletto, and Lucia, but also for her acting ability. Yet her description of first nights in New York's Metropolitan Opera House sounds like an actress's worst nightmare come true. "When you come into an opera in midseason, because of orchestra and staging costs, you never have a chance to rehearse with the rest of the cast. The cast and orchestra have rehearsed with the lead singers who start the season; everyone who comes in later has to just walk out on the stage and fit into the action as best he can. It's very unnerving. When I made my debut at the Metropolitan, I had rehearsed with the other leads around the piano, but I had never even been on the Met stage. I had no idea how my voice would sound in the house. When I first went on, I stopped almost stone-still, I think, just trying to get my bearings."

Gianna has had ample opportunity to compare the Metropolitan with other opera houses, for her schedule sometimes takes her from New York to Milan, from Rome to Rio, and to several music-festival cities within one year. Yet she still finds time for recital tours. "Recitals are terribly important because in them a singer shows what she really can do. You have to change mood and character with each song; and there's no scenery, no orchestra, no other singer to support you. There's only you.

"In a recital I only sing two arias. I sing a great variety—Spanish, French art songs, Debussy, American contemporary. I hate a program of old chestnuts." Her dark eyes flash. "I think in this country we tend to sing down to the audience, and I just don't believe—you can't make me believe—that they don't appreciate hearing really fine music."

You can hear examples of Gianna's concert repertoire on Columbia's Songs of Ned Rorem on which she sings four of his lovely compositions. She has also made several operatic recordings, including The Barber of Seville, for Deutsche Grammophon, and the rarely recorded Lakme, Angel is releasing Tales of Hoffmann in the fall, on which Gianna sings Olympia. The recording has a superb cast, including Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, Victoria de los Angeles and Nicolai Gedda, and we recommend this light, lovely opera especially for people who think they don't like opera.

Speaking of superb casts, one of Broadway's biggest hits, Luv, has just been released on a Columbia album. Now you can have the talented Anne Jackson, Eli Wallach, and Alan Arkin perform Murray Schisgal's hilarious comedy about people, love and life, right in your living room. Don't be selfish, invite your friends over to share the fun.

Good background music as you sip Irish coffee and discuss Luv (or love . . .) is found on two new releases by RCA Victor. One, Derek and Ray Playing The Sound of Music and Other Richard Rodgers Hits, spins the two-piano sound that's become so popular. The dozen selections are favorite Rodgers' tunes—"Wait Till You See Her," "Spring is Here," "Climb Every Mountain"—spiced with a pinch of ... The other, My Cup of Tea: Si Zentner, serves up marvelous orchestral treatments of such rhythm and blues hits as "A Hard Day's Night," "Wishin' and Hopin'" and "The House of the Rising Sun." Si's orchestra is heavy on brass and rhythm and he's great on arrangements.

Another good arranger is the new singer-pianist, Frankie Randall, who's just released an album Frankie Randall Sings and Swings (RCA Victor). When he's swinging such songs as "My Kind of Town," you almost think he's Sinatra. When he's singing such ballads as "As Long As She Needs Me," you almost can't think.

And while you're in a "can't think" mood, let yourself sink into The Astrud Gilberto Album (Verve). Astrud is the Brazilian girl whose breathy rendition of "The Girl From Ipanema" helped make it a household melody. On this album she sings wistful bossa nova backed by a jazz combo not unlike Stan Getz's. It's a bossa nova buff's banana split.

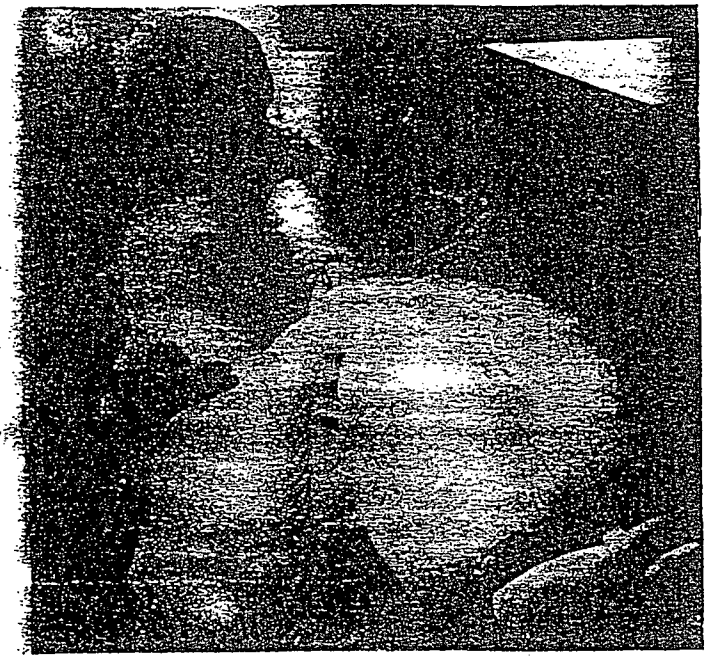
A goody for folk music fans is Peter, Paul and Mary: A Song Will Rise (Warner Brothers). On it they sing "Motherless Child," "San Francisco Bay Blues" and "For Lovin' Me," plus nine others. Need we say more?

New to the folk music scene is Sebastian Temple whose Sebastian Temple: Africa Belongs to the Lion (Capitol) is a very exciting first album. A South African, Sebastian writes his own songs from the heritage of his magnificent, but troubled, country. Some of them have the social consciousness of a Bob Dylan, others the calypso-like beat of the African native. All are powerful.

Happy listening!

—MICHELE WOOD

Cosmo Goes to the Movies



In bopeep dress, Jane Fonda, above with Michael Callan, looks as if she might tend sheep. Instead she rustles cows, outfoxes cowboys, generally makes a howl out of Wolf City, Wyoming in Cat Ballou.

One of Joy in the Morning's greatest joys is the sensitive honesty of the love scenes between Richard Chamberlain (a law student) and Yvette Mimieux (his slum-descended wife).

Valentines to classy, talented Jane Fonda and everyone connected with a slapstick Western called Cat Ballou. Jane is a trim little gal who sets out to tame the town of Wolf City, Wyoming, avenge her daddy's death, and make "Sherman's march to the sea look like a bird walk."

She does, too, with the aid of an all-male band of the goofiest outlaws since Bob Hope shot Jesse James. It's a colorful spoof on the wild, wild West, where the tales are taller than the cactus—with Jane robbing trains, rustling cows, shooting up the countryside, dropping names like "Bat Masterson" and doing a campy saloon take-off on Mae West.

There are whole scenes that don't make any sense at all, only because they are parodies of countless old shoot-em-ups that never made any sense to begin with. All the performers are hilarious clichés, especially Lee Marvin as a sort of Skid Row Buffalo Bill, and Stubby Kaye and the late Nat King Cole who plunk out Cat's sad ballad, hillbilly-style.

In the end, as the lovely Miss Fonda escapes her own hanging and rides off into an air-conditioned sunset with her gang of comics, the satire is complete, the audience is in stitches, and you are left with a hip impression of what the Old West gunslinger Belle Starr might have looked like had she lived to make the cover of Harper's Bazaar.

Joy in the Morning is a vanilla-flavored love story about an ignorant Irish girl from the slums, her tender adjustment to the hypocrisy of a small Midwestern college town, and her marriage to a young law student during the Depression. Based on the best seller by Betty Smith, it has some of the eagerness and rhapsody of her famous A Tree Grows in Brooklyn, and draws a fine line between the people who get the cream in life, and the ones who take what's left.

Joy rises above soap opera, mainly because it's glorious to look at (like the mouth-watering opening shots, set against Utrillo-like swans, blossoming tulips and pastoral woodlands, and because it is so surprisingly well-acted by Richard Chamberlain and Yvette Mimieux. They are astoundingly good, largely because Alex Segal (the sensitive director of All the Way Home) has turned their coltishness into a part of their personal and visual appeal, moving them through each scene like kittens at play—pouncing and purring in love scenes that are about as real as movies will ever get. Everything is done with such honesty and conviction you get the flushed feeling you have wandered uninvited into someone's honeymoon in the middle of the night. The acting is to be applauded.

Nobody is to be applauded for the

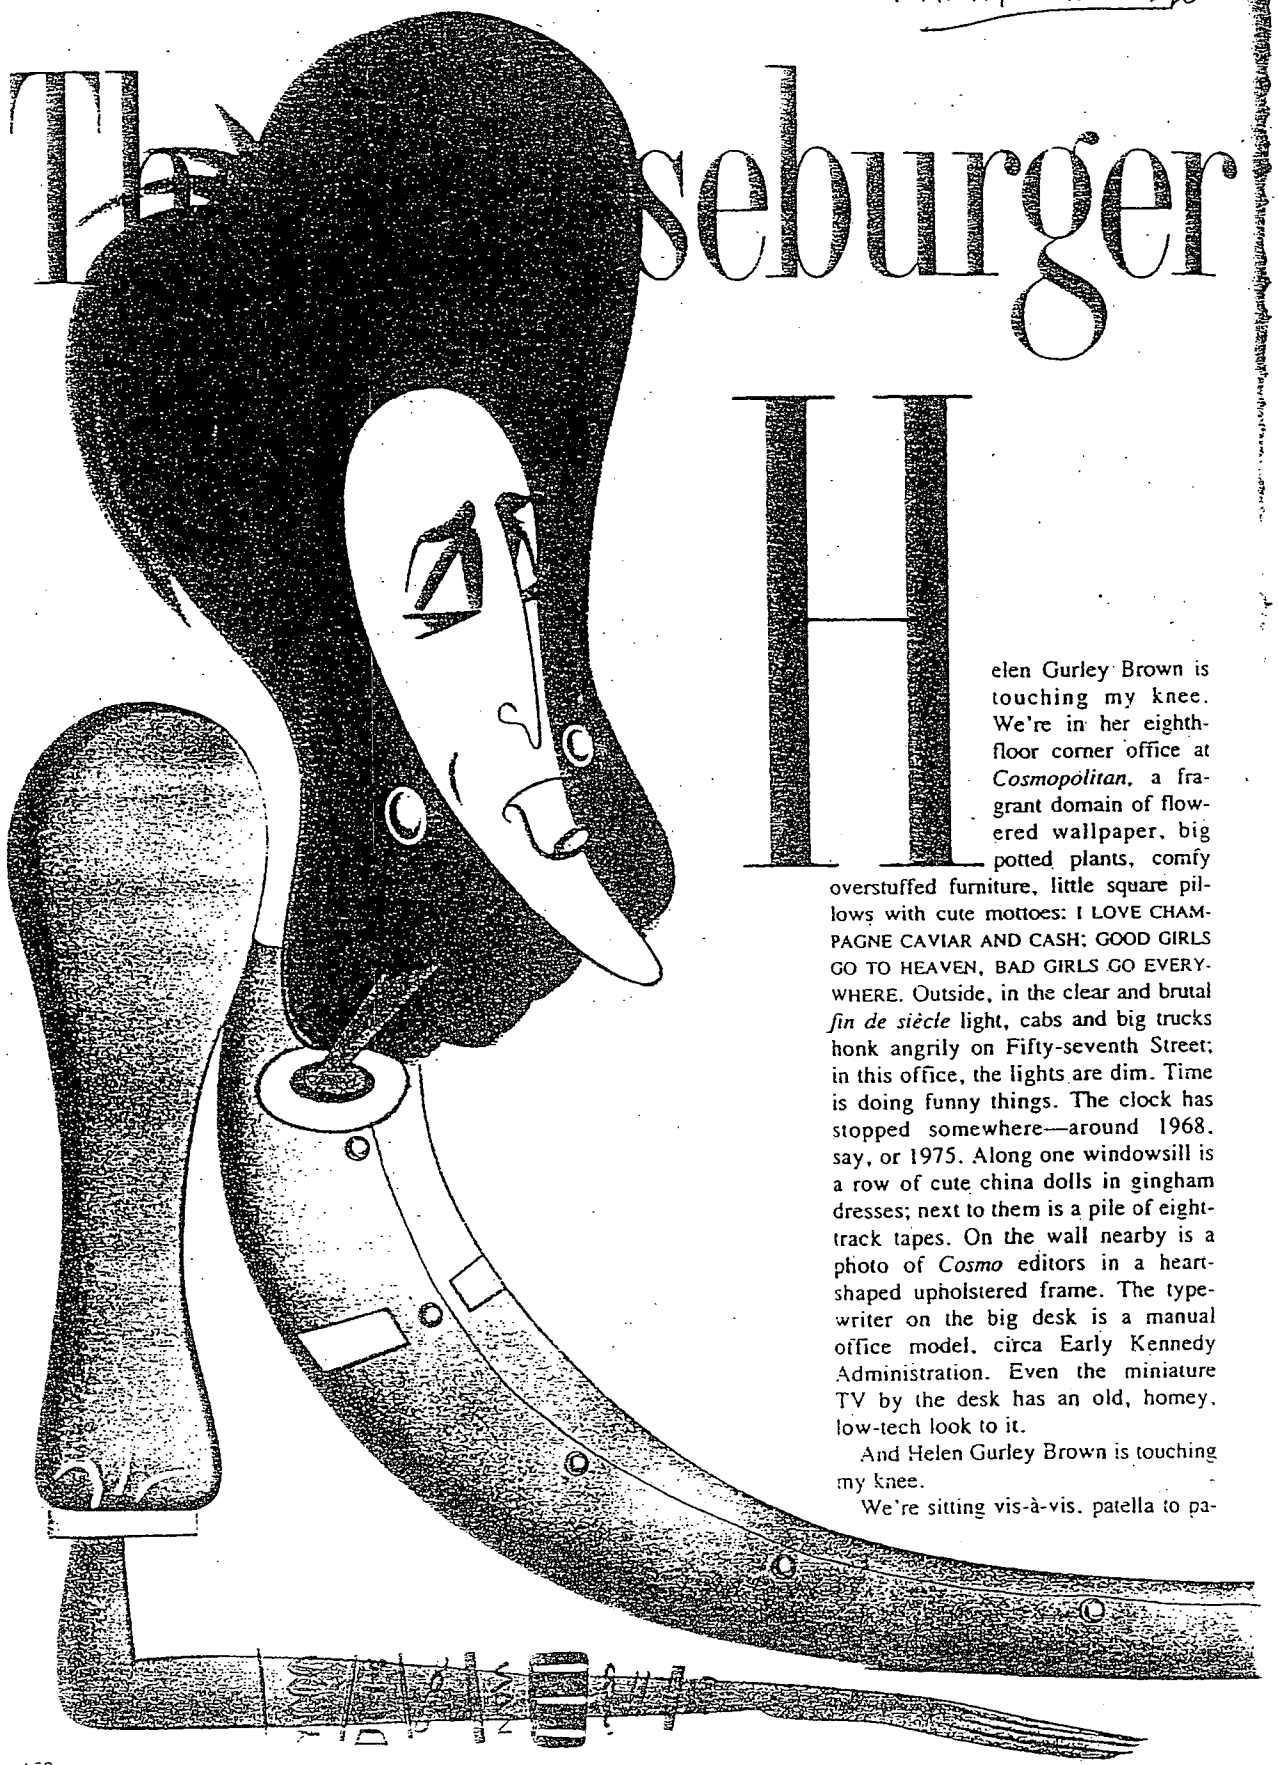
The Heseburger



Helen Gurley Brown is touching my knee. We're in her eighth-floor corner office at Cosmopolitan, a fragrant domain of flowered wallpaper, big potted plants, comfy overstuffed furniture, little square pillows with cute mottoes: I LOVE CHAMPAGNE CAVIAR AND CASH; GOOD GIRLS GO TO HEAVEN, BAD GIRLS GO EVERYWHERE. Outside, in the clear and brutal fin de siècle light, cabs and big trucks honk angrily on Fifty-seventh Street; in this office, the lights are dim. Time is doing funny things. The clock has stopped somewhere—around 1968, say, or 1975. Along one windowsill is a row of cute china dolls in gingham dresses; next to them is a pile of eight-track tapes. On the wall nearby is a photo of Cosmo editors in a heart-shaped upholstered frame. The typewriter on the big desk is a manual office model, circa Early Kennedy Administration. Even the miniature TV by the desk has an old, homey, low-tech look to it.

And Helen Gurley Brown is touching my knee.

We're sitting vis-à-vis, patella to pa-

That Roared

Twenty-five years have passed since Helen Gurley Brown put sex and the single girl into Cosmopolitan and changed women's magazines forever. And while dozens of clones have come and gone, 11 million readers still clamor for Brown's wisdom on careers, orgasms, and getting through the night. JAMES KAPLAN visits the grande dame who is still a working girl tella, in front of her desk, and the lights are low. And—

A man is talking to you, nothing very personal. Look into his eyes as though tomorrow's daily double winners were there. Never let your eyes leave his. Concentrate on his left eye . . . then the right . . . now deep into both.

The quote is from Sex and the Single Girl, Helen Gurley Brown's epochal 1962 best-seller, the book which—three years before she took over the Hearst Corporation's Cosmopolitan—established Mrs. Brown as the proto–Cosmo Girl, the e

"This look," Mrs. Brown wrote, "has been referred to rather disdainfully as 'hanging on his every word.' It was good in your grandmother's day and it's still a powerhouse!" And it is. The only problem is, I'm the one who's here to hang on her every word. The situation flusters her more than a little bit. It runs counter to her Ur–Cosmo Girl instincts. And her slight agitation at having to be the talker rather than the listener is . . . sexy. It is an amazing reversal, an astonishing alchemy. It is the kind of Cosmo Girl judo Helen Gurley Brown invented, developed, and perfected, and, quite frankly, I never had a chance.

Helen Brown (this is her preferred appellation) isn't particularly thrilled about being sixty-eight years old. Then again, she doesn't pretend to be fifty-eight—which, in a certain light, she ld easily pass for—or sixty-two, or n sixty-seven. She freely admits to ry one of her years. She freely ads to having had her nose done, and face done, and she isn't one bit voice is soft, clinging, preter-naturally youthful, with a faint hint of Arkansas (where she was born) and old Los Angeles (where she spent her young womanhood). "And sometimes I see someone who looks really craggy, and I think, Why don't they just do it? We haven't eliminated jealousy and envy, but cosmetic surgery is so safe, so advanced—why not?"

There is something gently vehement about this, as there is about the woman herself. She is, clinically speaking, a thin, minuscule person, with sticklike arms and legs, no chest to speak of, a trim nimbus of light-brown hair, and a long, handsome, quizzical face, not unattractively tucked-looking around the edges. But leave clinical to the doctors. The hair is slightly wild; her brief forest-green sheath lets plenty of green stocking show, not to mention a wandering shocking-pink slip strap peeping out at the shoulder. The dark-brown never-leave-you-for-a-second eyes glisten and melt and smolder, and there is an almost sullen look about her mouth, and the total effect, in the lush, plush, dimly lit office is—God help me—wanton.

This aura of hers goes beyond physical space. That night I dream of Helen Gurley Brown. Although there is nothing specifically mortifying to report from this dream, its general tenor is clear enough: We're in an office in a high building. The floor is bowed upward, making it difficult for me to stand steadily. Her presence is disturbing, compelling.

It is hard to imagine anyone else in the universe taking a dying eighty-five-year-old general-interest magazine and not only resuscitating it but permanently altering the Zeitgeist in the process. Helen Brown has done these things with Cosmopolitan. She began doing them twenty-five years ago (the magazine's May issue celebrated this fact), and she has kept doing them simply because she can't help being herself. Somebody else might have written Sex and the Single Girl, but that someone else would doubtless have written it more cynically, more kittenishly, and not out of the fullness of her soul. Someone else might have taken over the editorship of Cosmo without ever having edited a word—but then again, who? Someone else would probably have tried to make Cosmopolitan more like the other magazines on the market, instead of imprinting it with her own, italicized mark.

But there is no one else like Helen Gurley Brown. And there is nothing else quite like Cosmo. Breathy, peppy, resolutely positive, and determinedly helpful, Mrs. Brown's magazine just keeps coming, and just keeps winning, to the dismay of hypersophisticates and culture planners everywhere. Who cares if another word is ever written about orgasms? Fidelity? Getting a man to commit? Three million buyers (and an estimated 11 million ultimate readers) of Cosmopolitan each month, that's who. "Is there anything new to say? There probably isn't," Mrs. Brown herself admits. But say that old thing a new way every month, with plenty of pizzazz, slap a terrific Scavullo girl on the cover—and, most important, put Helen Brown in charge—and you've got something.

While there are many who find the whole enterprise more than slightly risible, Cosmopolitan's astounding success over the last quarter-century speaks for itself. It's not just marketing. There's something there. Eleven million readers is a lot of readers. And twenty-five years is a lot of years. In the world of magazine publishing, where new product (including numerous Cosmo clones) proliferates like toadstools after a summer storm—and dies off just as easily—and where editors come and go like Yankees managers, twenty-five years is a dynasty of Egyptian proportions.

Helen Brown rides herd on every idea suggested for the magazine, sending back her memos, pro or con, on pink paper, in perfect Cosmo Girl–ese. She scrutin note—

"She was perfect to work for—much better than any of the men editors I knew," says Judith Krantz, a frequent contributor for years. "She knows exactly what she wants to change, and she tells you: 'Page 7, paragraph three.' Most men say, 'Just run it through the typewriter again.' "

"We just send over two or three chromes of a cover shot, and the phone rings, and that's it," says Francesco Scavullo, the photographer. "She doesn't hold it for a year. [Art director] Linda Cox calls me and says, 'It's on,' or 'Helen hates it,' and I know. Helen isn't vague. She's instant, like the click of a camera."

She knows. And she has known since day one exactly what she and her readers are all about. "People are buying Cosmo to figure out how to get through the night," Mrs. Brown tells me. That's it—that's the whole secret, right there. Trends, pretty models, handsome hunks, recipes: you'll find them in Cosmopolitan, as you will everywhere else. But every magazine maven knows it's the mix that's important, and Cosmo's is nonpareil. In the bright light of her daydreams, every Cosmo reader is that Scavullo model; more important, however, is the dark night of her reality. In that dark night, she is a mouseburger. And mouseburgers need help.

Helen Gurley Brown has always been ready and able to provide it. "Women think if they could just understand men, they could do something," writes Nora Ephron, a former Cosmopolitan contributor, in the introduction to the book of her screenplay for When Harry Met Sally... "Women are always trying to do something. There are entire industries based on this premise, the most obvious one being the women's magazines."

It wasn't so obvious in late 1964, when David and Helen Brown began to put together a primitive dummy for a monthly to be called Femme—a magazine to be aimed at the same audience that had so responded to Mrs. Brown's hugely successful Sex and the Single Girl. In those days, help for women trying to do something was nearly nonexistent. "There was a little bit of advice in the fashion magazines," Helen Brown says. "Glamour had its 'Jake' column. But there was nothing with the depth and extent and velocity that Cosmo was to have. The advice in the women's books was all about mother and home and hearth."

Helen Gurley Brown knew women wanted something more. She had lived as a single girl until the age of thirty-seven, and a vivid, frustrating, unaided time it was. She had been a mouseburger herself.

That was a long time ago. Since her marriage to movie executive and producer David Brown in 1959, Helen Brown has—with his affectionate help and occasional prodding—risen to the celestial reaches of power. For the past two decades she has swung enormous weight in the magazine world, and, as a result, become a kind of cultural institution. She has appeared on innumerable TV and radio talk shows, and along the way has made the hosts her friends. She has endowed a journalism chair at the Medill School of Journalism at Northwestern. She has debated at Oxford.

All this, coupled with her husband's parallel success in the movie and television businesses and on Broadway, has led to a New York power-couple existence of extraordinary ease and affability. Operating out of a penthouse quadruplex on Central Park West, Helen and David Brown are on all the right lists, but they somehow manage not to fuss much about it. When I ask Mrs. Brown for the names of some people I might talk to for this piece, she laughs —and gives me six pages of names that would make a publicist's head swim. I call all these people. I talk to Henry Grunwald and Raquel Welch and Larry King. "We have many friends in common," Ed Koch tells me. "People like Abe and Shirley Rosenthal and Henry Kissinger."

"Helen is a good girlfriend," Erica Jong says. "She's a wonderful person to have lunch with. She loves to dish. I remember this incredible lunch with her and Liz Smith at the Four Seasons where I just sat with my mouth open while the two of them let the whole world have it."

The Helen Gurley Brown gestalt may all sound pat and planned and even a bit calculated—the aptness of her maiden name, the sweeties and pussycats, the cute, sexy office, the ubiquitous italics (of which she is surely the greatest master since Salinger)—but it's not. It's none of those things. It is, in its own way, whistling in the dark.

Despite indications to the contrary, Helen Brown is not an easy person to be. She rose from difficult circumstances, the memory of which haunts her every gesture. There was her poor childhood among rich friends in Little Rock: her father, a schoolteacher and state legislator, was killed in a freak elevator accident when she was ten and left his wife and two daughters barely solvent. There was her difficult adolescence and early adulthood in Los Angeles. Helen's older sister contracted polio soon after the fatherless family moved west to make a new beginning; it was the end of the Depression, and soon Helen was supporting the three of them through a series of secretarial jobs. She had seventeen of those jobs in fifteen years; she either got fired or moved on, trying to find something better.

"I was totally in love with the entertainment business, because that, to me, spelled glamour," Mrs. Brown says. "And my own life was so pitiable. You know, we lived by a railroad track. On Fifty-ninth Street and Western Avenue."

This was the old L.A., Los Angeles with a hard g, city of zoot suits and hopheads, round cars and slouch hats and little old ladies running health-food/Christian cults. And a million refugees from the South and Midwest, looking for a better life—a life which, for most, never materialized.

"The gophers used to tunnel up under my bedroom floor," Helen Gurley Brown recalls. "The floor was wobbly, because they were under there, tunneling. And the trains would come by and make so much racket you couldn't even talk. I'd be sitting in a car with a date, and when the train came, you had to shut up until it went by. It took about five minutes."

There were jobs in radio—she worked for Abbott and Costello—and army and navy shows during the war. She also worked at MCA, a place that embodied glamour for her: "That beautiful building at 9370 Burton Way—and so gorgeous, the chandeliers. The girls had to take the back stairs, of course; you couldn't even use the front stairs, because Jules Stein was not big on secretaries. And on Saturday, that's when the movie stars would come in from playing tennis. Ronnie Reagan used to whip up the stairs in his tennis shoes. He was terribly nice." But that job didn't last long, either: soon she was fired for having a romance with one of the agents.

"Finally, when I lost my whatever job it was, sixteenth, I guess, there was a job open at [ad agency] Foote, Cone & Belding, and it wasn't glamorous; it wasn't show business. But I finally realized that show business wasn't helping me. I'm not even dating Danny Kaye! So I reluctantly took this job in downtown Los Angeles. And then I began to do O.K. Mr. Belding was a darling man. He and his wife sort of adopted me. Socially, they took me everywhere. My own mother and sister were still there, of course, and I adored them, but they were so—I mean, my mother was so socially inept, my sister was in a wheelchair, so it was nice to be adopted by a rich couple. And I was a hard worker. I would be at the office at dawn. Mr. Belding would come in, it would still be moonlight outside, and he would say, 'Miss Gurley, you're here!' I would say, 'Yes, Mr. Belding.' And I had to come all the way from West Los Angeles; it took a fucking hour on the bus to get there. But I knew I wasn't a very good secretary, and the least I could do was to show up and be there. I never went out for coffee with the other girls. Stayed through my lunch hour. But I made a nice salary, and I was learning, and it was wonderful. I thought, How long has this been going on? These are real people. This is not show business, but it's terrific."

Helen Gurley Brown should be a living inspiration for late bloomers everywhere. At an age when today's young women worry if they haven't made partner yet, or had their first child, or both, she was a secretary without prospects. At thirty-one, she entered a Glamour-magazine contest called "Ten Girls with Taste." "I had about as much taste as a giraffe," she says. "I could write pretty well. And I was one of their ten

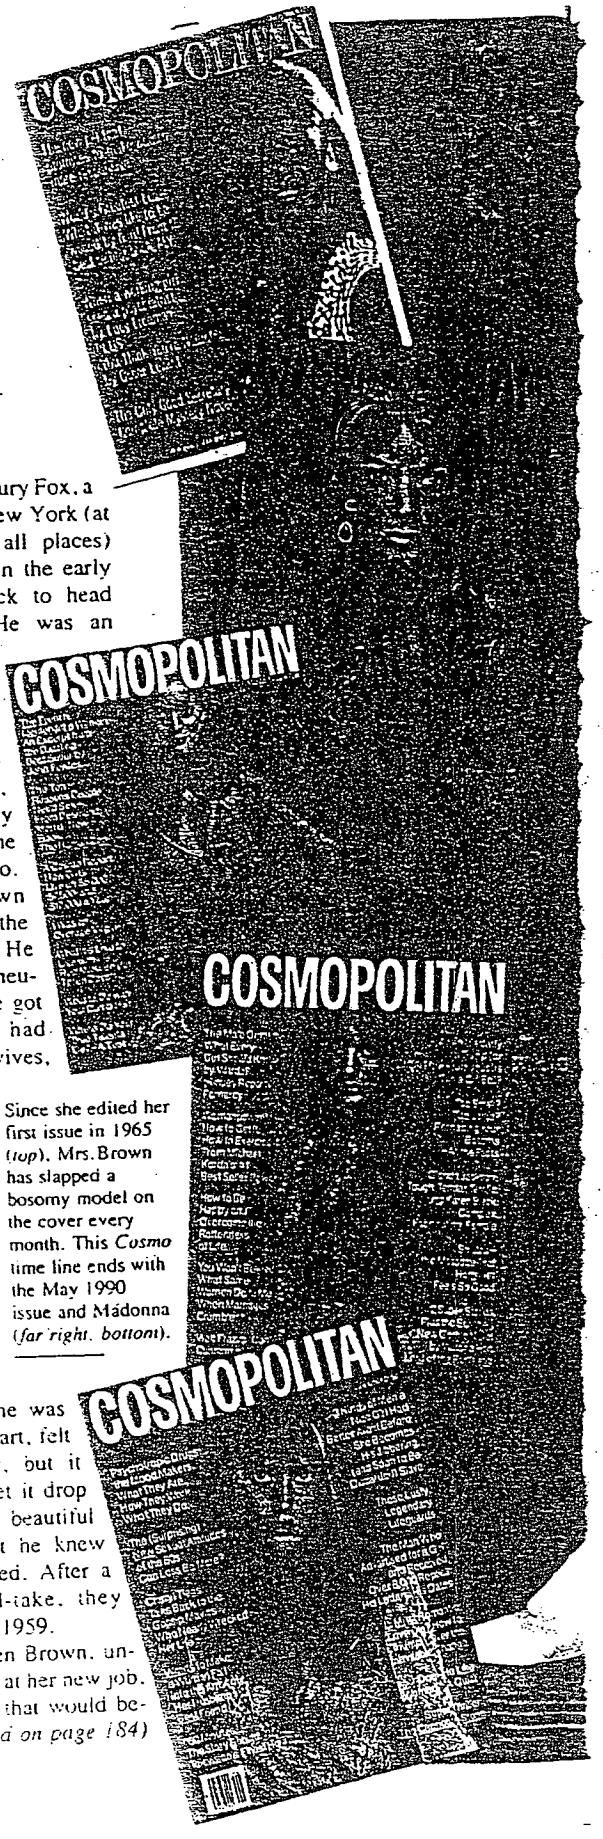
"It must be exhausting to be a girl at sixty-eight," an acquaintance of Mrs. Brown's tells me.

winners. On the questionnaire it said, 'What are your goals?' And all I wanted was to continue to be Mr. Belding's secretary and not get fired. But it didn't sound like it would be a very good idea to say that. So I said I wanted to be a copywriter. And because of that they let me write Sunkist radio commercials once a year at Christmastime. And then I would go back and be a secretary. And it went on for three years. And finally this woman at Glamour called my boss and said, 'Well, let Helen write copy.' "

She wrote ad copy for a while, with some success but not much confidence. She was still a mouseburger at heart. But she was a clever mouseburger, passionate and furtive. She loved several men, none of whom she quite had for herself—one was married; another was an inveterate Don Juan who cast her off and reeled her back in again and again—and she strained mightily to improve. She tried group therapy, psychoanalysis. She scrimped and saved, managing to put aside some money as well as send a week's salary every month to her mother and sister, who had moved back to Little Rock. Her progress was noted. In 1958 another ad agency stole her away from FC&B, at twice the salary, to work on the Max Factor campaign. Meanwhile, she had managed to save $8,000. Then one day she walked into a Beverly Hills Mercedes dealership and bought herself a used convertible, blue-gray, with a cloud-gray leather interior, for $5,000 cash.

The mouseburger had risen and roared. She could barely believe it herself. She was catatonic with fear and regret over her huge expenditure, her new station in life, everything. But an important part of her had wanted this car and felt she deserved it, and, as it turned out, the purchase was fateful.

David Brown was a vice president of production at Twentieth Century Fox, a former magazine editor in New York (at the old Cosmopolitan, of all places) who had been hired away in the early fifties by Darryl F. Zanuck to head Fox's story department. He was an atypical movie executive of the time, a gentle man and a gentleman, cultivated, literate, but ambitious nonetheless. He was homely-handsome, charming, well paid, and inordinately fond of pretty women—the kind of man women flock to. Except that David Brown tended to end up with the wrong type of woman. He liked them complex and neurotic, and that was how he got them. At forty-two, he had been left by two beautiful wives, both of whom had begun affairs while still married to him. Brown was twice-burned and very shy—he had spent several years in a round of psychoanalysis and obliterative promiscuity—when a mutual friend introduced him to Helen Gurley.



Since she edited her first issue in 1965 (top), Mrs. Brown has slapped a bosomy model on the cover every month. This Cosmo time line ends with the May 1990 issue and Madonna (far right, bottom).

She set her heat-lock eyes on him and knew he was the one. Brown, for his part, felt instant sexual electricity, but it was only when Gurley let it drop that she had bought her beautiful Mercedes with cash that he knew this woman was grounded. After a little nervous give-and-take, they married in September of 1959.

Making It Big

"What is this?" Schwarzenegger is saying. "What are you giving me?" Dressed in a gray suit and maroon tie, he is standing in a meeting room on the third floor of the Westin Hotel in Washington, D.C. A woman who works for the Council on Physical Fitness has just handed him a script. "I get scripts everywhere. At the gym, at the gas station, and now from you." The woman, who is around sixty, explains that the script was written by her daughter. "Will I see you tomorrow?" he asks. "I don't know," she says. "I don't feel so hot." "Really?" says Schwarzenegger. "You look hot. You look really hot!"

He is halfway through a daylong meeting of his fitness council. Milling about this room are thirteen of the committee members, including tennis pro Pam Shriver and gymnast Peter Vidmar. Schwarzenegger flirts with everyone. He teases men about their lack of abdominal muscles and questions women about their attire. "You wore the black stockings today," he says to one woman. "Did you wear those for me?"

As would be expected, Schwarzenegger is an inspirational committee chairman. "Fitness has to be marketed like a vehicle or a TV set or a movie," he says to the group. "We have to say, 'It's hip to be fit. That's it. Read my hips. No more fat.' " He laughs. "You like that? I just improvised."

Nothing that Schwarzenegger says is particularly profound, but his zeal is astonishing. He seems tireless. "I've been watching him for days now," says one committee member, "and I still can't get over his enthusiasm. He's obsessed with this thing."

As the meeting draws to a close, one of the members of the committee moves to the back of the room. "He's not what I thought he'd be," she says as she gets her coat to leave. "I mean, I had heard things about him, and I was expecting something else." The woman pauses. "You know, I'd seen the book."

The book the woman is talking about is Arnold, a recently published, unauthorized biography by Wendy Leigh. It makes much of Schwarzenegger's alleged womanizing and accuses him of being, essentially, a Nazi sympathizer, due to his friendship with Kurt Waldheim. "Arnold is not in any way, shape, or form a Nazi sympathizer or a believer in Nazi doctrine," says an old friend, who chooses to remain anonymous, owing to Schwarzenegger's sensitivity about the book. "She had it pretty much right about the girls—before Maria, Arnold was a champ in that area—but she was dead wrong about everything else."

Schwarzenegger claims he has not read the book, and he says he did not see the National Enquirer story that previewed the juicier sections. "The National Enquirer story hit when I was down in New Orleans making a speech at a health-and-fitness convention," he recalls. "I thought I should have a joke about the story. So I went out there and I said, 'Thank you so much for inviting me down here. It means a lot to me, because it means that not everyone believed what they read in the National Enquirer.' The audience started laughing, so I knew, Aah, some of them must have seen it. So I said, 'For those of you who don't know about it, I was just again on the cover of the National Enquirer, and I don't care, to be honest, if they call me a murderer or charge me with treason, but did you see the picture they used? That really pissed me off.' " Schwarzenegger pauses. "You have to move forward and be offensive," he says. "For every punch, there's a defense. There will always be those ten guys shooting at you, but you must live on the offensive."

This is exactly the same message Schwarzenegger gives to his committee. It is, in fact, the Arnold message: You must live on the offensive. Forget the book. Forget the obstacles. Remember your sense of humor, and always, always keep your eye on the prize.

Before he begins production on a new film, Schwarzenegger has a recurring dream. "A week or so before I start, I always have a nightmare. In the dream, I am sitting naked in the dark, with the cameras ready to roll. And I'm not prepared—I don't have my clothes on, the scene isn't ready, and I don't know what I am trying to shoot. Then I wake up, and it's the middle of the night, and I look around and I think, Wait, I'm not ready." Schwarzenegger pauses. "I have no patience for my dreams—my life is quite interesting enough, and there's not much room for another dimension. But I have this dream before every movie."

Schwarzenegger is not about to interpret his nightmare—self-analysis does not interest him, and he is "totally against" psychiatrists. "To me, analysis takes away from enjoyment," he says. "Can you imagine if you intellectualized sex?"

Nevertheless, the dream is somewhat appealing—it proves that, contrary to all appearances, Schwarzenegger does in fact have anxieties. He claims that he doesn't really worry, and he does seem remarkably happy being Arnold, but still, there is that nightmare. Perhaps Schwarzenegger has at least a tiny dark side.

"Are you kidding?" says Milius. "Arnold is one of the most content people I know." Schwarzenegger agrees. "Things are good," he says in his hotel room in Washington, D.C. His next film, Kindergarten Cop, is to be directed by Ivan Reitman, who hit it big with Schwarzenegger and Danny DeVito in Twins. Schwarzenegger is planning more projects, including an intriguing idea called Duke and Fluffy, in which he would play a dog transformed into a human being. His wife, Maria, has just altered her career in order to be home more with Katherine and, of course, Arnold. In a few minutes, he's going to head over to his in-laws' house in Potomac to see his baby.

"Things are going well," he says again, getting up to leave. "The baby. The fitness stuff. The movie." Schwarzenegger smiles. "There is nothing better than having fun." □

Helen Gurley Brown

(Continued from page 154) the Single Girl is well known now. David Brown encouraged her, pushed her, edited her—but she did the work. The book, whose title and basic thesis—that an unmarried woman needn't be, by definition, a neuter nonentity—were shocking in 1962, became a huge best-seller, and its author became the victim of her success. She made bushels of money, got bushels of mail, and she quit her job. But she had no idea what to do with the rest of her life. After David Brown was fired from Fox in 1963, in the wake of the financial catastrophe of Cleopatra, the couple moved to New York. David had taken a book-editing job, but Helen's famous workaholism was latent still. She wrote a less successful sequel to Sex. She answered her voluminous mail. She wrote a newspaper column. She was terrified to leave the apartment.

In early 1965, television was killing the general-interest magazines. Hearst seriously thought of folding Cosmo, but decided to give it one last try, switching it to a book for the single career woman. David Brown got wind of Hearst's idea and managed to get them the dummy for Femme that he and his wife had put together. Helen was hired as the new editor of Cosmopolitan.

"She had never edited a magazine," David Brown writes in his toothsome new memoir, Let Me Entertain You. "I don't think I had ever seen her read one." Helen Brown, in her contribution to the book, recalls:

> The night before I was to report for work at Cosmo, be introduced to the staff, etc., David and I were walking down Park Avenue after dinner and I was weeping up a storm—right on the street. . . . What all this was about was . . . sheer naked fear. The next morning as I took off for work, I said, "Okay, David, just what do I do when I get there?" "Ask the managing editor to lunch," he said. I did that. The managing editor had a date, so somebody brought me a sandwich. That day I solemnly met the staff—wearing a pretty soft blue wool jersey dress with a ruffle at the hem and at the neck—shook hands, [and] announced I didn't intend to fire a soul. . . . Several people said to each other—which got back to me—that surely I should have been brought in on a lesser level to learn something before being given the top spot.

She warmed to the task. From the instant Brown was first able to set her mark on the magazine, its circulation began to rise, as did her salary (David Brown had negotiated a peach of a deal, with Mrs. Brown's compensation tied to the magazine's sales) and editorial self-esteem. But it was only her confidence that needed forming, not her worldview. She knew what she wanted.

"Helen wanted a sexy girl with a bosom on the cover—that was her original idea," Scavullo says. "I stuck with it. Now every model from coast to coast making $7,000 a day wants to be on the cover of Cosmo for practically nothing. In the beginning I had to beg girls to show their bosoms; now they'd do it nude."

"I was furious the whole time I worked for her," Liz Smith says cheerfully. The syndicated gossip columnist, who was Cosmo's entertainment editor for eleven years, remains—both despite and because of the experience—one of Helen Brown's closest friends. "I wasn't allowed to write critical movie reviews. Everything had to be positive. She destroyed my credibility as a film critic. If the movie was really awful, she just wouldn't let me write the review. Bobby Zarem used to say that people paid me to write these positive reviews—well, I was the one person nobody had to pay."

"She was a great boss," Myra Appleton says. "Very straightforward, and she played fair. She didn't brood about things, and she didn't keep score. Once we ran a piece twice. The person responsible felt awful, but Helen just said, 'Oh well, let's hope nobody notices.' "

"Cosmopolitan is a major money-making base for the whole Hearst organization, but Helen spends their money the way she spends her own," Judith Krantz says. "Hearst loves it, but writers don't particularly appreciate it. I remember going to the mat with her about a hundred-dollar raise. She's a very tough-minded businesswoman."

"She was famously cheap," says a former Cosmo editor. "You had to beg to get office supplies. I was hired and cast adrift. I had no idea what to do, so I started assigning pieces and cutting deals with writers. And one day she came to me—I mean, I was paying $2,000 or $2,500 for pieces, which is nothing—and said, 'Oh, my dear. A thousand is a lot.' "

Something in Helen Gurley Brown is still riding that bus from West L.A. to her secretarial job. She and Liz Smith once had a huge fight about the fact that she, Helen Gurley Brown, takes the bus to work. "I have to see what my girls are wearing," Mrs. Brown said. According to Judith Krantz, "She and David take the bus to Elaine's! They have the best table at Elaine's, and they take the bus. It makes them feel young and reckless."

But that isn't the whole story.

"She doesn't have enough self-confidence for what she's achieved," a close friend says. "I know a lot of successful people like this. Part of them is always running from the sheriff."

It's easy to see, in Helen Brown's dark emotional eyes, that she knows about getting through the night. She worries about things. About money, even though there's no longer any need to. About age. About her husband, who is fonder of work and cigars than exercise.

David Brown left book publishing in 1964 and went back into the movie business, eventually joining Richard Zanuck to produce Jaws, The Sting, and Cocoon. He has also been his wife's closest editorial confidant and the writer of Cosmo's cover blurbs for twenty-five years. At seventy-four, he has two successful plays on Broadway, as well as numerous movie, TV, and literary projects in the pipeline. He and his wife are an utterly devoted couple, each of whom, perhaps because they are childless—David Brown had a son by his first wife; Helen Brown has never wanted to be a mother ("I didn't want any rivals," she says)—is, in a way, child to the other.

It gets intense. Mrs. Brown is famously jealous. "Lee Bailey and I have a house in Bridgehampton," Liz Smith says, "and Helen and David sometimes come out and visit us there. Once, just after Jaws came out, the four of us were having lunch on the deck, and Helen said to David, 'Now that you're such a success, are you going to leave me for a younger woman?' She was very serious. Lee and I were embarrassed—it was one of those moments when you don't know where to look. And David said, I think kind of jokingly, 'I'm sixty-two years old. If it were five years ago, you might have to worry.' And Helen just burst into tears. It was terrible."

"Our last big fight was a few weeks ago," David Brown tells me. He is a courtly gent, kind-eyed, white-mustached. "We'd just come out of Mark's Club in London, and I'd left a £10 after-tip. And Helen has a horror of my overtipping, which I do shamelessly and with joy. As we were going into the vestibule, where this very austere concierge, with swallowtails and starched shirt, was getting my coat, Helen said, 'You really are an asshole.' I said, 'What are you talking about?' She said, 'You left the equivalent of seventeen dollars for the woman who brought you rolls.' And I said, 'I don't know who it was, but I did do it.' And she said, 'You're a fucking asshole. How could you?' I said, 'Please don't do this here.' Well, that sort of exacerbated her, and she went on. The man never showed any emotion. 'Here is your coat, sir. Good evening, madam.' And we went out, and she kept on. Anyway, I determined that I would not return to Claridge's, and she walked in another direction.

"But the subject of divorce has never entered our life. Ever. I occasionally bring it up and she says, 'That's not an issue.' And I say, 'You're not even Catholic.' She says, 'Be miserable, but you're not getting your divorce.' "

Helen Gurley Brown tells me, "It's never left me, the idea that the man-woman relationship—dating, flirting, F-U-C-K-I-N-G, living, loving—is just endlessly wonderful and fascinating, and also full of problems, sometimes."

"It must be exhausting to be a girl at sixty-eight," an acquaintance of Mrs. Brown's tells me, a mite wickedly. Maybe, but probably no more so than it was when she hit the ground running at forty-three. "My beloved shrink, who died, said I was the most goal-oriented person he had ever encountered," Helen Brown says. "I can't go to a party without having a goal, which is to cheer up the sparrows. I cannot just smell the daisies or look at the sunset. I have to do my deep breathing and at the same time I'll work on my posture."

How long can she keep this up? Since Hearst is a privately owned company without mandatory retirement, how long does Helen Brown plan to stay with her magazine? "I imagine the deal we have

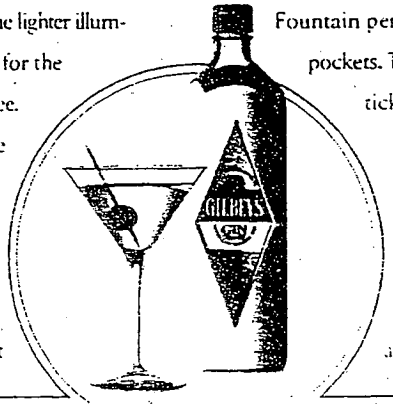
The lighter was Sandoz, the jewelry Cartier, and a martini was the perfect accessory.

It was a game really. From her handbag the woman would reveal her silver Chaumet cigarette case. Slowly she'd roll a cigarette through her fingers giving him just enough time to reach for his gold Sandoz lighter. Then, just as the tip of the cigarette would part her lips, he'd strike the lighter illuminating her face for the entire room to see.

It was a game played out in restaurants, ballrooms and clubs every night.

And the right accessory could say everything about the players, even spilling over into the drink one held. The martini.

But not just any martini. "A martini dry with a dash of bitters," "A martini sweet, no olive," "A dry Gibson, stirred." Accessories are making a comeback. Fountain pens cling to lapel pockets. Timeless watches tick from wrists. Elegant jewelry adorns necklines. And the martini is back. Gilbey's. The perfect accessory.



Gilbey's. The Authentic Gin.

with each other is, I can go on working as long as Cosmo is pulling its weight," she says. "In terms of how long one wants to do this—I can't tell. It bothers me to figure out what I'm going to do in July."

She looks meditative. "At sixty-three or sixty-four, I went virtually out the window," she tells me. "I began to realize that I was no longer young. But since suicide was not open to me, I had to work it out.

"Just lasting is the best revenge," she says. "I've passed up everybody I've ever envied. I intend to not only live to be 109, but to be in great shape."

Helen Gurley Brown, all five feet four, ninety-seven pounds, and sixty-eight years of her, is riding in a big black car down to "21," to give the Subaru people and their ad agency a piece of her mind. "They're not an advertiser, but they should be," Mrs. Brown tells me matter-of-factly. "And I intend to bash their heads in—in my Cosmo Girl way."

She's sitting in the backseat next to Seth Hoyt, her publisher, a tall, spiffy, hearty type in a bow tie. As the limo cuts into midtown, they're looking at a roster of lunch attendees. "Who's my mortal enemy on this list?" she asks Hoyt.

"Everybody," he says.

Mrs. Brown isn't having any of it. "How much does this car cost?" she asks, indignantly, about the model Subaru would advertise in Cosmo—if it advertised in Cosmo. A minute later we pull up alongside Manhattan's most famous array of lawn jockeys. "Well," says Helen Gurley Brown, "if they're not good to us, we'll never have them to lunch again."

Upstairs, a vaguely mortuary function room swims with advertising types and media people. Helen Brown works the party insistently and expertly, letting no conversation proceed for long without inserting her tiny, giant presence. The compass needle in each talk circle she visits points immediately to her.

The crowd sits around a big table, undergoing a round of blustery introductions and a high-pressure picture-board presentation by a barely-out-of-diapers Cosmo ad salesman, who points to covers of Glamour, Self, and Mademoiselle, saying, "They're copying us, and changing all the time. But Cosmo is the same as it was yesterday—it will not change." The show winds up. Mrs. Brown stands. "I don't know how you feel," she says. "I feel bludgeoned."

It is the true voice of Cosmo at last—the thrilling, ardent, just-us-girls voice. After swiftly correcting the young salesman—"I wouldn't say we don't change, Angus. But we're five minutes ahead of the pack all the time"—she gives a quick sketch of the magazine's history under her tenure, and then a strange, hypnotic thumbnail bio of Helen Gurley Brown. "There I was," she says, "with no money, wall-to-wall acne, and no college degree. My relatives were hillbillies from the Ozarks." She turns her full, beaming smile around the table. The faces are rapt. "If I can make it, so can you." ❑

In Your Face

(Continued from page 148) leather jackets, L.A. Laker jackets, and Armani jackets, gay guys, and lots of women, on dates, in groups, some covering their faces in embarrassment, others hooting as Dice taunted a young woman in the front row: "Look at that face—I bet she's got a bush that would knock my Aunt Tilly's socks off." There were a few blacks and a few more Asians, laughing along to dumb jokes like "What's a fat chink? A chunk." As far as I could see, only one kid, in a V-necked sweater and pressed white jeans, was thrusting his fist in the air and shouting "Dice!" It was hardly Nuremberg revisited, though a German word did come to mind: Kindergarten. When the naughty nursery rhymes started, I felt as if I were trapped in a day-care center run by Salvador Dali. The only time the widely varied crowd seemed to turn into a single-minded mob was when Dice lashed out at the press. "Only they can't see how funny it is," he yelled, "for 15,000 people to get together to tell dirty Mother Goose stories. You know what the press can do with their fuckin' papers? They can wipe their fuckin' assholes with their papers!" Fifteen thousand kids stood up and cheered, and I slipped my notebook into my Paul Stuart jacket.

After the finale, an Elvis impression with Dice backed up by a band of Brooklyn buddies, I was taken to the star's dressing room by Carl Stubner, the tour coordinator. What do I call him? I wondered. Dice? Andrew? "I call him Andrew," said Stubner. "I like Andrew better than I like Dice." I would hear various versions of that line, from various people in the star-making machinery behind Dice Clay, again and again: The guy onstage is not the same guy in real life. Dice isn't Andrew. Andrew isn't Dice.

Out of the silver-studded black leather jacket, he appeared smaller, softer, flabbier than he had onstage. Dice is cold and slick. Andrew was warm and likable. Dice barks. Andrew schmoozed. He introduced me to his girlfriend, a pretty blonde he calls Trini Benini, but whose real name is Kathleen Monica, and to his father, Fred Silverstein—Dice's real name is Andrew Clay Silverstein. "My dad does everything with me," he said. Dad was wearing a light-blue sports jacket, a beige-on-beige shirt, beige slacks, and black Gucci-style loafers. Warily, he asked me what part of Brooklyn I was from, and then said that they were from Sheepshead Bay but had made the mistake of moving to Staten Island for five years. "We moved back," he added. "I missed the candy store on the corner." He said he was in construction for years. "Until I got involved with this kid."

"Trini," said Andrew Dice Clay, collapsed on a couch, "I think I should have a turkey sandwich now." Trini went to the buffet of cold cuts wrapped in yellow cellophane and made it.

"He has to have a turkey sandwich after every show," explained movie producer Howard Rosenman. "No drinks, no drugs—just a turkey sandwich." Rosenman was just one of the phalanx of executives congratulating their rising star: Joe Roth, chairman of Fox Film Corporation; Joel Silver, Michael Levy, and Barry Josephson, all from Silver Pictures; Rick Rubin, the producer of Dice's records; Michael Rotenberg, from the Gallin agency; and Sandy Gallin himself.

"We can hang in L.A.," said Dice Clay as he escorted me to the door. "And I'll tell you how much I hate it. Then, next week, we can hang in Brooklyn, and I'll tell you how much I love it."

So now we're hanging at the Four Seasons—Andrew, Hot Tub, and me. Dice Clay has on one of his 350 black leather jackets, a black T-shirt, baggy jeans, black boots. A gargantuan silver eagle hangs from a thick silver chain around his neck. "I'm into silver," he says. "To me, gold's too showy, you know what I mean?" He tells me with startling self-confidence, "We just saw a

TRANSDERMAL LIP PLUMPER

NEW Product Update

PLUMP, PROVOCATIVE, PERFECTLY KISSABLE

LIPS

- WITHOUT PAINFUL INJECTIONS
- WITHOUT EXPENSIVE OR DANGEROUS SURGERY

You want full, plump, sensual lips for the same reason everybody wants full, plump, sensual lips. They're sexy. They make you look young, provocative, and mysterious – even a little dangerous.

Full, Sexy, Desirable Lips... Without Painful Injections or Surgery

Until now, the only way to get those pouty, "come-kiss-me" lips (unless you're one of the lucky few to be born with them) was to endure a long series of painful injections or undergo expensive and potentially dangerous surgery. Well, not any more.

Sövage Dermalogic Laboratories, a division of Klein-Becker usa, has brought its exclusive, transdermal gel technology to the bio-cosmetic arena with Sövage Transdermal Lip Plumper – imagine young, sexy, desirable lips, without feeling the sting of a hypodermic needle or enduring the slice of a surgeon's scalpel.

How Does Sövage Transdermal Lip Plumper Work?

Sövage Transdermal Lip Plumper works in two important ways: first, it produces an immediate increase in hydration, causing a noticeable – yet painless – swelling of the lips. Second, Sövage Transdermal Lip Plumper exerts a profound influence on fat cells just below the surface layer of lip tissue (yes, it's subcutaneous fat cells that make lips full and plump) so, as your lips increase in size, they look natural and stay soft. No one but you will know why your lips suddenly look fuller, sexier, and more appealing... but everyone will see the difference.

Get Sövage Transdermal Lip Plumper today. And finally experience the attention that younger, fuller, poutier lips provide. Sövage Transdermal Lip Plumper is guaranteed to work for you or it costs you absolutely nothing!

The Cosmo Girl's Guide to Milking Summer

BY CARA LITKE

The next time you hang at a pool, leave the reading material behind and just let your mind wander. (PHOTO: BETH STUDENBERG)

Tank-top-and-margarita season is only three months long, which is why you should juice every moment to the max. And if you have to misbehave a little — so be it.

Ahhh...summer. The fabulous season when it's perfectly acceptable to ogle shirtless guys like it's a sport, wear your bikini day and night and play even harder than you work. Problem is, these amazing couple of months seem to come and go faster than any other time of the year.

"When we were younger and in school, summer was a guaranteed three-month vacation, which made it feel like it was passing slowly," says medical psychologist Dan Baker, Ph.D., founding director of the Life Enhancement Center at Canyon Ranch in Tucson, Arizona. "But as we age and have more responsibility, we no longer have that luxury of free time, and the season seems to speed by."

Which is exactly why you have to make the most of summer while it's here. To do that, you need a clever game plan for cheating the system — that's where Cosmo comes in. These are our most-inspired suggestions.

How Trusting Are You?

Occasionally checking up on your man is smart, but some girls take it to stage-three paranoia. Where do you fall?

send this quiz to a friend see all quizzes

1. Your boyfriend is in the shower when his cell rings. The screen reads "Lisa." You:

- ◯ Pick it up and demand, "Who is this, and why are you calling my man?"
- ◯ Let it go to voice mail... Whatever
- ◯ Tell him someone named Lisa called and nonchalantly ask who she is

Is He Looking for Sex -- or Love?

Photographs by Drew and Derek Riker

To tell if a guy is only inter one-night stand or someth serious, you have to learn unspoken signs.

next : If he half smiles...

Is He Looking for Sex — or Love?

If he half smiles...

If he holds a looong, piercing gaze...

If he laughs easily...

If he interlocks his hands with yours...

This privacy policy applies to the web sites of Seventeen magazine, CosmoGirl! magazine and Teen magazine (collectively the "Magazines"). The Magazines are owned by Hearst Communications, Inc.("Hearst") This privacy policy describes how Hearst treats the personally identifiable information that is collected about you when you visit the web sites to which this policy is linked, and the information collected on the Magazines' behalf to the extent we use third-party service providers to host the web sites or collect information about site users.

What is Personally Identifiable Information

"Personally identifiable information" is information that we can use to identify you as an individual. Personally identifiable information includes your name, address, telephone number, and any other information that is connected with you personally.

Information This Privacy Policy Does Not Apply To

This privacy policy does not apply to information collected about you by anyone other than the Magazines (and their third party service providers) and only applies to the web sites to which it is linked. Any information you provide when you visit Web sites other than those covered by this policy (including the web site to which you will be linked if you subscribe online to the magazines and including other web sites affiliated with Hearst Communications, Inc. and its magazines) or when you purchase any products or services that may be offered or advertised on our web sites by companies other than the Magazines is subject to the privacy policies posted on such sites by those affiliates, or, as applicable, those of the third party organizations who run and/or own these web sites. Except as specifically stated herein, this policy also does not apply to information you may provide to us offline.

Collection of personal information

The Magazines endeavor to maintain the security and integrity of personal information that we obtain from our users. We do not disclose personal information to any outside party except as disclosed in this policy. We also suggest that girls check with their parents before giving out any personal information on our website.

Newsletters and Registration

To subscribe to our newsletters, you must be over the age of thirteen, and we ask for your e-mail and your zip code. When you sign up for those portions of our sites that require registration, we ask for a bit more: your first name, birth date, zip or postal code, and what country you live in. This information is for internal use only and will not be distributed or sold to any parties outside the Magazines except as described in this policy. Newsletter subscribers generally get two emails per month. We might also send out e-mails to users to announce special offers, services and announcements from our site and/or our advertisers. We may also use any personal information you send for marketing and promotional purposes and we may share your personal information with third parties who may choose to contact you to promote their own goods and services. If you want us to stop sharing your personal information with third parties in this way, click on the links below:

Except as specifically stated herein, this policy also does not apply to information you may provide to us offline.

Collection of personal information

The Magazines endeavor to maintain the security and integrity of personal information that we obtain from our users. We do not disclose personal information to any outside party except as disclosed in this policy. We also suggest that girls check with their parents before giving out any personal information on our website.

Newsletters and Registration

To subscribe to our newsletters, you must be over the age of thirteen, and we ask for your e-mail and your zip code. When you sign up for those portions of our sites that require registration, we ask for a bit more: your first name, birth date, zip or postal code, and what country you live in. This information is for internal use only and will not be distributed or sold to any parties outside the Magazines except as described in this policy. Newsletter subscribers generally get two emails per month. We might also send out e-mails to users to announce special offers, services and announcements from our site and/or our advertisers. We may also use any personal information you send for marketing and promotional purposes and we may share your personal information with third parties who may choose to contact you to promote their own goods and services. If you want us to stop sharing your personal information with third parties in this way, click on the links below:

Q: I colored my hair purple with semipermanent dye a month ago--and it still hasn't washed out! --Leslie, 15

A: Don't worry, there's hope. Applying a hot-oil treatment (try Alberto V05 Hot Oil Hair Treatment) should do the trick by lifting away the color without damaging your hair...

Deja-Vu Break-Up
September 06, 2005

A few weeks ago, one of my very best childhood friends (let's call her "Ally") left me a voicemail on my cell...She said her long-time boyfriend had broken up with her and that she felt like the situation was deja-vu from what I went through...

Q: I want to date my best friend's ex-boyfriend, but everyone says he's off-limits. The thing is, she dumped him, and they only went out for two months. What do you think? -- Melanie, 15, Lowell, MA

A: I know this isn't what you want to hear, but if she's your best friend, I don't think you should date her ex, or even go after him. Whether she broke up with him or he broke up with her, they were together...

Q: I get depressed sometimes just out of nowhere. My boyfriend thought I could never be happy, so he left me. My mother always yells at me that I need to quit acting like I have problems when I don't. My friends don't know what to do, so they just stay away when I'm depressed. Is it normal for me to feel this way? --Taylin, 14, Arlington, TX

WELCOME TO CosmoGIRL!

How do I change the address on my account?
Changing your address can be done easily online by clicking here. If you experience problems, you may contact us by mail at CosmoGIRL! Customer Service Dept., P.O. Box 7791, Red Oak, IA 51591-0791 or call toll-free 1-800-827-3221. Please include a copy of your mailing label that is attached to your magazine for better service. [back to top]

How do I make a payment on my account?
You can easily make a payment online by clicking here. You may also mail us a check with your invoice (please do not send cash) at CosmoGIRL! P.O. Box 7791, Red Oak, IA 51591-0791 or to pay by credit card call toll-free 1-800-827-3221 to speak to a customer service representative. [back to top]

How do I renew my subscription?
To renew your subscription online, click here. We will contact you well in advance of your subscription expiration date by mail so that you will not miss any future issues of CosmoGIRL!. If you feel that you have missed renewal notices or have recently moved, be sure to change your address. Or you may request to renew your subscription by contacting us by mail CosmoGIRL!, P.O. Box 7791, Red Oak, IA 51591-0791 or call toll-free 1-800-827-3221 to speak to a customer service representative. Renewal instructions must be received at least 8 weeks prior to subscription expiration to assure your magazine will be delivered without a break in service. [back to top]

Where can I get general information about my account?
All general inquiries regarding your account may be handled online by clicking here.

Your Magazine Label contains valuable information about your subscription. It shows your expiration date and also carries postal codes that speed delivery of your magazine. To ensure that your magazine is delivered to you in the most efficient manner, please verify that your street number, street name, city, state and zip code are correct. This allows the post office to assign the correct +4 zip code which speeds the delivery of your magazine. To expedite customer service requests online, please provide your name and address exactly as it appears on your magazine's mailing label. Once your online account is established, you will be identified by your email address for future customer service requests. When contacting us via postal mail, please provide a copy of your magazine's mailing label with your correspondence. If you do not have a copy of your label, please write your exact name, address and postal code as it appears on your label. To view a copy of a magazine label, click here.
Scent-free Copies may be requested by contacting online customer service department or in writing at CosmoGIRL!, P.O. Box 7791, Red Oak, IA 51591-0791 or call toll-free 1-800-827-3221 to speak to a customer service representative.
Third Parties who sell goods and services that we believe would be of interest to our readers, occasionally make requests to obtain CosmoGIRL!'s subscriber names. If you would rather not receive such mailings, please contact us in writing and send your current mailing label or exact copy to Mail Preference Service, P.O. Box 7024, Red Oak, IA 51591-0024. For more information, please refer to Hearst's Privacy Policy. [back to top]

What do I do if I've received a bill, but I've already paid?
If you have received a bill after you paid for your subscription, they probably crossed in the mail. You can check your account status at any time to verify that we have received your payment. Click here to check your account status. If you feel that there has been an error in processing your payment, click here to provide additional information to resolve the problem. [back to top]

What happens if I get a damaged issue?
If you receive copies that have been damaged by postal delivery, please contact us online or in writing at CosmoGIRL!, P.O. Box 7791, Red Oak, IA 51591-0791 or call toll-free 1-800-827-3221 to speak to a customer service representative. [back to top]

What happens if I miss an issue?
If you have seen CosmoGIRL! on the newsstand and have not yet received your copy, it's probably in the mail. For the January and July issues, please allow until the 15th of the month prior to the current issue month before reporting a problem. For all other issues, please allow until the 30th of the month prior to the current issue month before reporting a problem. If you have missed an issue click here. (For example, if you have not received the November issue of CosmoGIRL!, please wait until October 30 before contacting us.)

If you have recently ordered a new subscription of CosmoGIRL! and have not yet received your first issue, please be aware that it usually takes 6 to 9 weeks to start US subscriptions and 9 to 12 weeks to start International subscriptions. If your order date exceeds these timeframes and you need to contact customer service, please click here. [back to top]

When does each issue of CosmoGIRL! get mailed out?
CosmoGIRL! is published almost every month so you'll receive ten (10) issues per year. On-sale dates for monthly magazines are generally one month prior to the current issue. For example, the November 2000 issue of CosmoGIRL! went on sale October 3, 2000. [back to top]

Where can I send a letter to the editor?
If you have comments regarding CosmoGIRL!'s editorial content, you may contact our editorial staff via email at cosmogirl@hearst.com. Any requests regarding your subscription account should be directed to Customer Service. You may also contact our editorial staff in writing at Editorial Dept., CosmoGIRL! Magazine, 1790 Broadway, New York, NY 10019. [back to top]

How do I contact customer service?
All general inquiries or problems regarding your account may be handled online by clicking here.
To contact us in writing: CosmoGIRL!, P.O. Box 7791, Red Oak, IA 51591-0791
Call us toll-free: 1-800-827-3221 [back to top]

How do I cancel my subscription?
To cancel your current subscription, please contact us in writing at CosmoGIRL!, P.O. Box 7791, Red Oak, IA 51591-0791 or call toll-free 1-800-827-3221 to speak to a customer service representative. If you have not yet paid your subscription, you can cancel it online by going to the payment summary, and clicking the "cancel" link on the left. [back to top]

Where can I order a media kit?
Requests for advertising rates and media kits may be directed to CosmoGIRL!, Advertising Dept., 1790 Broadway, New York, NY 10019 or you may call 212-649-3370. [back to top]

What is CosmoGIRL!'s reprint policy?
CosmoGIRL! is fully protected by copyright and nothing that appears in it may be reprinted wholly or in part without permission. For inquiries on reprints, please contact us via email at cosmogirl@hearst.com or in writing to CosmoGIRL!, Editorial Dept., 1790 Broadway, New York, NY 10019 or by phone at 212-649-2900. [back to top]

How do I purchase back issues?
Current and previous issues are available for US$5.24 postpaid from single copy sales (Foreign/Canadian copies, please add $2.75 to each order for postage). You may make the request in writing to Single Copy Sales, Hearst Magazines, P.O. Box 7763, Red Oak, IA 51591-0763 or by phone at 1-800-925-0495. All requests must be paid at the time of order by check or credit card. [back to top]

A new trauma every day!

Guard Cat

"My cat is very protective, and most of the time, he thinks he's a dog. One day while my dad and I were home, my cat was running around outside. All of a sudden the doorbell rang, and when my dad opened the door, the UPS guy was just standing there screaming with his mouth wide open. Our cat had dug his claws into the guy's thigh and was just hanging from his leg! My dad had to apologize and tried to take the cat off, but he wouldn't budge. We felt really bad, but we were also so embarrassed."

from me to you

A letter from our editor-in-chief.

Hi, CG!s!

Summer's flying by, which is kind of a bummer, but we've got a whole bunch of stuff to distract you from the fact that school starts way too soon...

1. The relaunch of the Battle of the Boys contest! Did you submit a hottie you know? If not, come on, girl, stop holding out on us! And be sure to vote every day for the guy you think is total eye candy.

2. Play our new game Makeup Shakeup--it's fun! And you can check out all of our Kiss of Approval Beauty Award winners while you're at it!

3. Last but not least...CG! to Go, our fall shopping mini-magazine! Check out what you want, click through to find out where to get it... then maybe back-to-school won't seem quite so bad after all.

Happy August!

Love,
Susan

how to help

Find out what you can do to help the victims of Hurricane Katrina!

Hurricane Katrina has left THOUSANDS of people homeless, more than a hundred people dead, and hundreds more lost or stranded in the floodwater. Eighty percent of New Orleans is flooded, up to 20 feet high, and other parts of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama have all been hit by the disaster!

We are ALL affected, and it's up to the rest of us to lend a helping hand!

Monetary donations are especially helpful because it allows people to get what they need rather than worry about storing any other goods. But check out the following links for ways to donate or learn more about dealing with the Hurricane Katrina crisis.

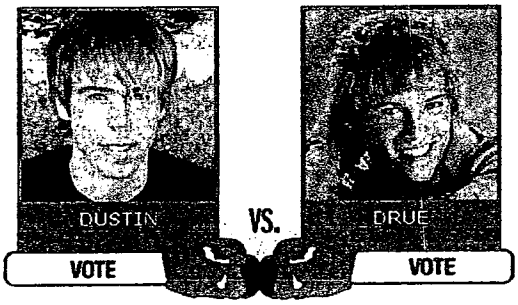
Battle of the Boys

Two guys go head-to-head every day! Who's hotter? You decide!



SEE WHO ALREADY WON

CHECK OUT MORE CUTIES

Each day, two hot guys will face off!

At the end of each day, the competitor with fewer votes will get knocked out and a new challenger will take his place! At the end of the month, the guy left standing will score a prize for himself AND the girl who submitted him to the contest. Plus, he'll make it into the final battle in May 2006 - a month-long face-off for a grand prize and to be named Hottest Guy in America!

Vote now and come back tomorrow to see if your choice won!

Official Rules

Who's the hottest guy you know?

Is he your boyfriend? Best friend? Cousin or classmate? Submit his picture to be featured in CosmoGIRL!'s Battle of the Boys and you could both win win a prize if he is a monthly winner!

It's easy!

Click here to fill out the form and attach your guy's photo. If you don't have a digital picture, you can mail a photograph, along with his name, phone number, e-mail address, and date of birth to:

Win Mischa's autographed T-shirt!

win it

Mischa says that, unlike Marissa, she was never popular in high school. She says she's not the type of person to have let's-go-shopping-and-get-manicures-and-pedicures girlfriends like Summer on "The O.C."

Mischa says that no matter what people think of her public persona, her family knows what she's really like...especially her little sister Hania, who has always been her best friend.

In the September issue of CosmoGIRL!, Mischa opens up to her little sister and the whole CG! sisterhood about family, fame, guys, and why popularity really doesn't matter.

Pick up the issue today and enter to win Mischa's autographed T-shirt!

body & soul challenge

Win cool prizes just for making exercise a part of your life!

In every issue through May 2006, CosmoGIRL! will feature a Work It! workout and a Body & Soul Challenge question to motivate you to make exercise a part of your life.

September's question: What body and soul goals do you have for yourself this year? Answer it here!

Now enter to win a Nike cuff watch here.

By entering this month, you will also be entered to win CG!'s Body & Soul Challenge Grand Prize, which will be given away in May 2006: a three-night spa and fitness getaway for you and a friend to the Four Seasons Resort Scottsdale at Troon North and a $1,000 Nike wardrobe!

CG! to GO

Time to buy all your back-to-school gear!

It's that time of year again, CG!s: Time to go back-to-school shopping! We've taken the CosmoGIRL! to Go shopping mini magazine and put it online just for you!

Just click on the link below to see the entire mini magazine. You'll have to install a little software, but it's worth it! Check out all the jackets, T-shirts, shoes, bags, and more!

See something you want? All you have to do is click the "Get It!" link and you'll go to a Web site that will either let you buy it online OR tell you where you can get it near you!

Here's how to see the mini mag!

If you have a PC:

1. Click on the link below
2. Click "Save" and save the software to your desktop
3. Go to your desktop and click on the CosmoGIRL! icon on your screen
4. Create a user name and a password
5. Download the CG! reader
6. Install the CG! reader
7. Read your magazine

If you have a Mac:

1. Click on the link below
2. Create a user name and password
3. "Download" the CG! reader
4. Go to your desktop and click on the Zinio icon on your screen
5. Install the CG! reader
6. Enter your user name and password
7. Read your magazine

It's that easy!

So what will you be wearing on the first day of school?

1. You and your girls are planning a surprise birthday party for a friend. You immediately:
   - ○ Start organizing who's going to take care of invitations, gifts, decorations, snacks, etc.
   - ○ Say, "Does anyone mind if I play DJ? I have a couple of really good mixes in mind."
   - ○ Go, "Let me know what I need to do"—and then do what they tell you.

2. Your group wants to give old clothes to Goodwill, but no one's sure how to get them there. You:
   - ○ Figure out a day that's convenient to stop by each one's house so you can fill your trunk and get it done in one big haul.
   - ○ Offer to drop it all off—if they'll just bring what they have to your house.
   - ○ Wait for someone else to figure out what you guys need to do.

1. All right! You get paired with your crush for your English class screenplay project. You:
   - ○ run up to him after class and tell him every detail of your brilliant idea.
   - ○ tell him you'll start thinking up storylines.
   - ○ let him make the first move. If he writes the whole movie, then he'll really be your leading man.

2. The school radio station needs a DJ. When the media teacher asks you to fill the post, you say:
   - ○ you'd be thrilled to.
   - ○ you'll think about it for a while. (Four whole after-school hours?)
   - ○ no way—you'd have to miss Oprah.

Are you ready to lead?

Before you lead the country, you've got to lead yourself!

Send this quiz to a friend | See all Quizzes

1. There's a girl in your math class who seems nice, but you don't know her very well. One day a friend of yours tells you that the girl has been saying some nasty things about you. What would you do?

   - Go up to her and ask if it's true. If it is, tell her how much it bothered you and ask her to stop talking smack.
   - Ask someone who hangs out with her if she's spreading rumors, but don't say anything to the girl herself.
   - Forget about it—you'd rather not give her anything more to say about you.
   - Go to a teacher and tell her what's happening, then let her intervene.
   - Find her and start a fight with her.
   - Complain about the girl to the friend who told you what she said.

2. Your friend Jane is running for class president against Kate, a girl you don't really know that well. But you think that Kate would probably be a better president than Jane, because even though Jane is your friend, she's lazy and disorganized. What would you do?

   - Vote for Kate, and if Jane asks you who you voted for, tell her the truth and explain why.
   - Ask your friends how they're voting and vote for whoever they're voting for.
   - Vote for Kate, but when Jane asks you who you voted for, you lie to her.
   - Ask your mom or a teacher for advice and do whatever she says.
   - Vote for Kate. And when Jane asks you who you voted for, tell her, "It's none of your business!"
   - Vote for Jane because she's your friend—and that's what friends are for.

3. Your parents are out of town. The last time they went away, you had a party and some kids got drunk and started fighting. You were grounded for three months. A girl who's really popular comes over to hang out and starts calling other kids to come over and party. What would you do?

   - Tell the girl to call everyone back to say that there's no party after all. If she won't do it, you call them yourself.
   - Call another friend to convince this girl to call people back.
   - Tell her that you're going to leave.
   - Get an adult neighbor or relative to come over and tell everyone that they can't party at your house.
   - Throw her out of your house.
   - Make her promise that nothing bad will happen and then let everyone come over.

1. Your closest friends are most likely to call you when they need someone to help them:
   - ○ Throw (or cover up) a party.
   - ○ With their guy problems.
   - ○ Get through some boring chore, like babysitting or cleaning.

2. Two of your friends get in a huge fight, so when one calls you to talk about it, you automatically:
   - ○ Say, "Oh, it'll blow over" and then tell her about your new crush.
   - ○ Ask why she's angry and gently try explaining your other friend's point to her.
   - ○ Get the other one on three-way and force them to make up.

Q: I get depressed sometimes just out of nowhere. My boyfriend thought I could never be happy, so he left me. My mother always yells at me that I need to quit acting like I have problems when I don't. My friends don't know what to do, so they just stay away when I'm depressed. Is it normal for me to feel this way? --Taylin, 14, Arlington, TX

A: I'm glad you felt comfortable coming to me with this. Let's put aside the fact that your boyfriend broke up with you. That's his problem. We need to deal with yours...

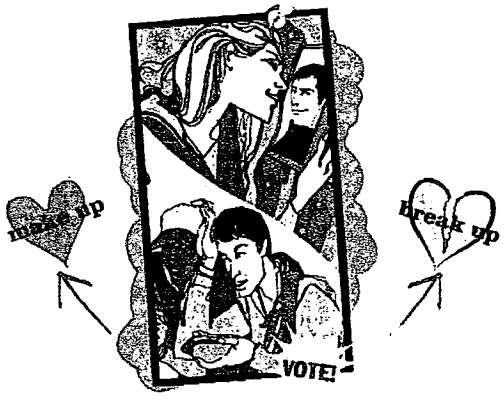
makeup or breakup?

Should this couple stay together or go their separate ways? You decide!

Kyla and Jordan should:



Kyla and Jordan promised to be faithful to each other when he went away to college, but it was harder than they thought.

Kyla says she can't trust Jordan since he made out with a girl at a fraternity party. She plans to go to his college this coming fall, but still feels insecure.

Jordan says he regrets making out with the other girl and that Kyla means everything to him. He thinks having her now at his college will help her learn to trust him again.

What should they do?

Before you vote, check out their whole story on page 84 of the September issue of CosmoGIRL!--on newsstands now!

Are you ready for romance?

Find out just how prepared you are to be part of a pair.

Send this quiz to a friend | See all Quizzes

By Jenna McCarthy

1. It's almost time for the Homecoming Dance, and it seems like everyone has a date--except you. You:
   - ○ don't mind going alone. You'll hang out with your friends and their dates—and probably have more fun than you would with some random guy anyway.
   - ○ call that cute guy you met last week at your cousin's party and ask him to go.
   - ○ put your friends (and relatives!) on a date-finding mission. You'd rather babysit your nightmare-of-a-brat neighbor than go to the dance without a date!
2. You think guys are like:
   - ○ lipstick: It can take a while to find one that really suits you.
   - ○ summer vacation: They seem to show up just when you're really ready.
   - ○ shoes: A girl can never have too many.

Deja-Vu Break-Up
September 07, 2005
A few weeks ago, one of my very best childhood friends (let's call her "Ally") left me a voicemail on my cell...She said her long-time boyfriend had broken up with her and that she felt like the situation was deja-vu from what I went through...

Q: I want to date my best friend's ex-boyfriend, but everyone says he's off-limits. The thing is, she dumped him, and they only went out for two months. What do you think? -- Melanie, 15, Lowell, MA

A: I know this isn't what you want to hear, but if she's your best friend, I don't think you should date her ex, or even go after him. Whether she broke up with him or he broke up with her, they were together...

1. You're auditioning for a school musical. When they call your name, you suddenly start to panic and debate whether you can go through with it. Your boyfriend says:
   - ○ "What are you freaking out about? It's only a stupid play."
   - ○ "Let's just forget it and grab a pizza."
   - ○ "Your voice is amazing and those judges are crazy if they don't realize it."
2. You show up for a date in a new outfit looking super-sexy and movie-star gorgeous. He says:
   - ○ "Hey, you do clean up okay!"
   - ○ "You should dress like this all the time."
   - ○ "Every single time I see you, you just keep looking hotter and hotter."

We managed to have a good conversation and I got myself a lunch date since we were both staying in the same city -- weird place to meet a guy right? Where's the strangest place you've met a guy? I'm sure there have to be some good bus/plane stories around here somewhere.

Great way to spend a plane ride

I was recently getting on a very long plane ride and came across a situation I think a lot of girls might have run into - the mass transit issue. Anyone who's been on any mass transit can appreciate the feeling of sitting down in the little seat and praying 1) the really over-weight sweaty person you see coming down the isle doesn't sit next to you 2) that the REALLY hot guy who just got on does sit next to you.

...Wait... Wait for it... Sweet, the sweaty guy just passed my seat... Ooooh, the cute guy's getting closer... Oh! He's stopping... YES! He's sitting next to me!... Oops, now I have to be charming for the next 12 hours, or at least not drool when I sleep (Yes, I've seen it happen and it's not the best first impression).

We managed to have a good conversation and I got myself a lunch date since we were both staying in the same city -- weird place to meet a guy right? Where's the strangest place you've met a guy? I'm sure there have to be some good bus/plane stories around here somewhere.

Love is all around

Hey CG's!

One thing I love about being a newly single girl in New York City is the ability to meet boys everywhere! My new habit is toting a tinted lipgloss and concealer with me in my bag everywhere I go, just in case I run into any hotties along the way!
The other day I had to run my iBook laptop to the Apple store in the super trendy Soho neighborhood of New York. It completely crashed, so I was waiting awhile for the Mac Genius to look at my hard drive and try to find the problem. Across from me, a really cute guy was waiting for his iPod to be serviced. Although he wasn't really my type, I did enjoy a full hour of flirty eyes and smiles back and forth with him. It felt so good! I think the key here is to remember that boys are everywhere! Once you open yourself up to the idea of how many available (and awesome) boys there are in the world, instead of focusing on who might hurt you, or who's taken, or who your friends wouldn't like, the world is your candy shop!

So now that my fellow NY CGIs are all running to the Apple store to pick up adorable Mac guys, what about everyone else? Where do you go in your town to scope the best boys?

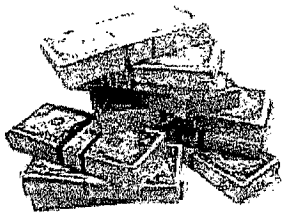
Money Matters



Right now I'm traveling abroad and I recently went out with a group of friends...but all the guys insisted on paying for us girls; they honestly got offended when we all wanted to chip in. One of the guys explained to me later that it's a man's job to pay. I didn't realize being born with certain equipment came with a job description!

I've come across this a lot when I'm out with guys in the U.S. too. A lot of guys feel the need to pay, which I guess is ok once in a while, but it makes me feel like I owe them something even though I know that I don't. My ex-boyfriend used to be this way, so finally we had to cut a deal: I would pay for cabs/gas and I wouldn't put up a fight if he wanted to pay for dinner - which was always. Do you think guys should always pay when you're out?

Happy Women's Equality Day!

Guess what today is! It's Women's Equality Day!

About 35 years ago, Congress decided it wanted to designate August 26th as a special day...It was to commemorate the efforts women have made to be treated equally and to also to celebrate the 19th Amendment (the one that gave women the right to vote!).

So, that was back in the '70s, when civil rights movements were a pretty big deal, right? But can you believe that the first women's rights convention was actually in 1848?! That just goes to show that women haven't been fighting for their rights for a few decades, but instead for a really, really long time!

I bet the women in 1848 or 1971 would be so proud of us now! I mean, really, look how far women have come and how many female powerhouses there are! Women STILL have to continue to push for equality (stats show that we get paid less than men on average, etc.), but I think today is the perfect day to celebrate a little girl power! I love boys...I do...but I am a firm believer that one woman's success is another woman's success.

What's next? Um, hello, a woman in the White House! I can't wait!

Happy Women's Equality Day!

Now that a lot of people think that doing certain drugs isn't a big deal so its harder to tell when they are using them. First you should think, who would he be doing drugs with? Does he hang out with a crowd who I know uses drugs? Chances are he's not doing it alone. Also, has he been secretive? Does he have mood swings? I'm not just talking about male-PMS (yes, there's definitely such a thing as MPMS) but really strange behavior. Finally, does he spend money really quickly but you can figure out where it's going?

If you think he's using there's only so much you can do. I had a guy once who began smoking weed, something I wasn't too crazy about. I knew that time he was spending with me was time he wasn't smoking-up with his friends and even though I didn't like that one behavior I liked him so I didn't want to break up with him. One day I told him 1) I would rather you quit 2) When you spend time with me you better not be high or I will leave 3) I'm not going to smoke. He was cool with what I said and things worked out pretty well; if a guy can't deal with those three pretty simple rules, he's not worth your time.

You can't tell people how to behave without running the risk of scaring them away, so my advice is say something along the lines of what I did - set your boundaries - but also let him know you like him when he's sober, and only when he's sober.

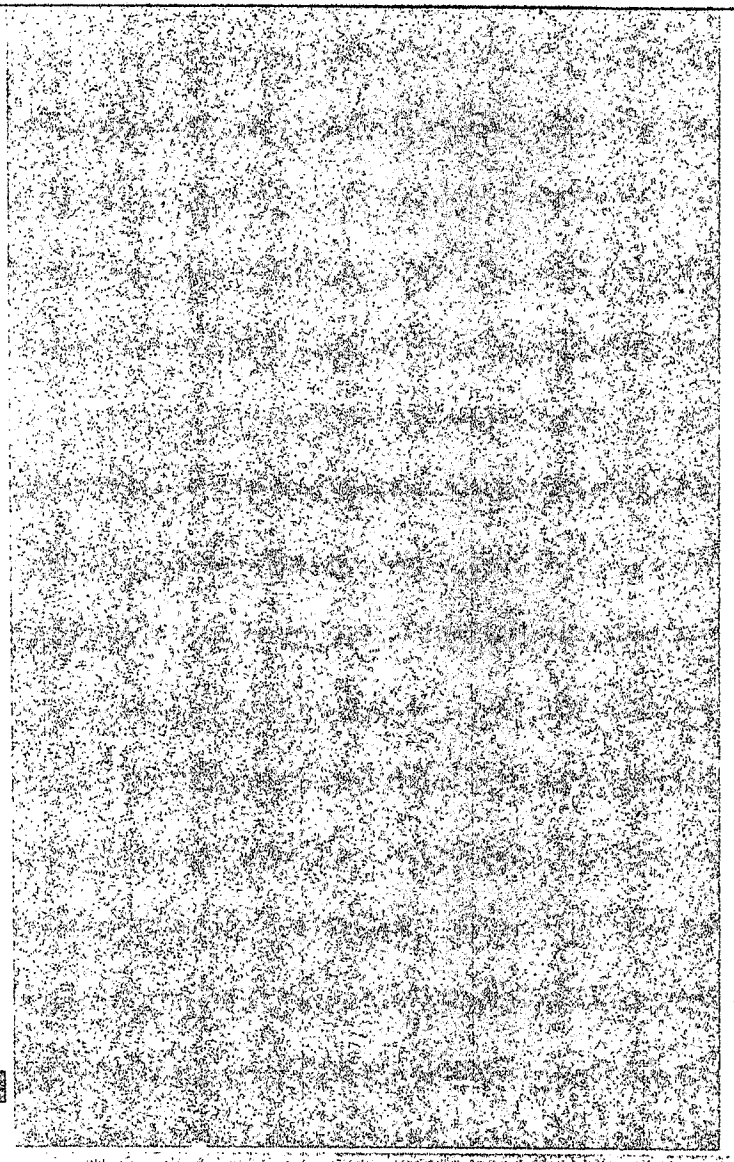
Happy Women's Equality Day!



song (P.S. I knew who Howie Day was, I just didn't know that song yet) and yes, word for word, it was the song Tom had "written" for me.

I knew Tom was sort of an insecure guy, so I never said anything about his weird (and deceptive!) claim that he wrote a song for me. I actually love "Collide," but I laugh almost every time I hear it or see the video now! I don't know what Tom was thinking, but he was always a little odd like that. He's now an actor/singer/model in Hollywood now and I'm just waiting for the day that he becomes famous and I can spill that juicy gossip about his former dating days. (I'm so nice.) Do you girls have any stories like this? Tell us!

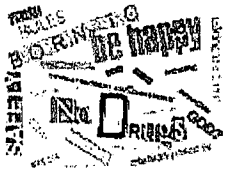
When guys have problems



There was a post a while ago that didn't get too much attention -- a girl from Phoenix, AZ wrote that she's been dating her boyfriend for four months and heard from a lot of people that he's been using drugs but when she asked him he denied it.

Now that a lot of people think that doing certain drugs isn't a big deal so its harder to tell when they are using them. First you should think, who would he be doing drugs with? Does he hang out with a crowd who I know uses drugs? Chances are he's not doing it alone. Also, has he been secretive? Does he have mood

How(ie) could he do that?!

My best friend, Layna, and I write e-mails to each other almost every day. But yesterday, when she wrote "I'm listening to the song Tom wrote for you," I burst out laughing. (P.S. Tom's name has been changed to protect his privacy, ha!).

Here's my funny story: When I was in college, there was this guy Tom who really wanted to date me. I was hesitant about it and so he took that as a sign to be extremely persistant and shower me with attention. So that's all fine and whatever (and yes, we did end up dating for a couple months actually!). But one of the things he did for me was "write" me a song. I got an e-mail from him one day that said "I woke up in the middle of the night and just had to write these lyrics down. I wrote this song for you, blahblahblah." So I read the lyrics, told him thanks, and then forgot about it. A few weeks later, I heard one of my sorority sisters SINGING THE SAME SONG. No way, right?! So I asked her where she heard it and she said, "Oh...it's Howie Day. It's called 'Collide.'" I immediately listened to the song (P.S. I knew who Howie Day was, I just didn't know that song yet) and yes, word for word, it was the song Tom had "written" for me.

I knew Tom was sort of an insecure guy, so I never said

Does anyone else agree? What are your thoughts on timing? Do you think, maybe, we could have everything we will ever need in front of us already, but can't see it till we're ready, ourselves?

Back-to-School Boy Resolutions

I know schools start at different times in different parts of the country, but I'm heading back in a few days and it's ridiculous how I still get nervous - and it's not about classes. I remember I used to hope that a new cute guy would transfer in (for a nice change of scenery from the normal guys) or that my crush would finally notice me. I know it's not New Year's, but I feel like the start of school calls for some type of new boy resolutions!

My boy resolution for this year is not to settle for a guy I only kinda like!

Do you girls have any guy resolutions for the new school year?

Which would you rather...

Which would you rather: Your boyfriend say he is gay or for him to say he's cheated with another girl?

My friends are split on this one but unfortunately we rarely get to choose (I personally rather him be gay but I have friends that loudly disagree). Recently a CG! from CA posted a note saying her boyfriend came out to her. Although she knows she can't be angry she's hurt he led her on. How should she handle it?

I would say first, never think you give up your right to be hurt, doesn't matter if he meant to or not...you're entitled to feel whatever is right to you. What you need to know however is that he's going through a lot of the same emotions and confusion that you are, if not more. What you should feel better about is that he was comfortable enough to come out to you; it's a big deal that he thinks of you as a good enough friend to support him. Feel free to express that you're hurt that you played his "beard" but remember that he might not have really known what he was feeling when you started dating.

This is one of those times that you need to give the guy a second chance and a real shot at friendship. Since he was good enough to date I'm sure he'll make a pretty good friend too, right?
