APPLICANT'S RESPONSE TO OPPOSER'S
MOTION FOR ENTRY OF PROTECTIVE ORDER

This memorandum demonstrates that the Trademark Trial and Appeal Board should deny Opposer's Motion for Entry of Protective Order and grant Applicant's Motion to Compel Discovery and Extend Applicant's Time to Take Discovery and for Protective Order filed on September 25, 2006. Opposer's recent Motion for Entry of Protective Order is only the most recent tactic in its effort to delay and deny Applicant the legitimate discovery it has sought – thus far unsuccessfully – from Opposer. The time has come to end Opposer's procedural obstructions to development of the merits of this action so that a reasoned decision can be reached on the merits of the controversy with the development of all the facts. We proceed now to detail why Applicant's requested relief is the just resolution of this matter.

Applicant filed its Motion to Compel only after Opposer failed to respond to Applicant's interrogatories in a responsible way and, compounding the problem, failed to produce any responsive documents. Standing on its objections and "need" for a two-tier Protective Order, Opposer still has failed to produce any responsive documents.

After Applicant filed its motion, on October 13, 2006, Opposer filed a brief in response to Applicant's Motion to Compel requesting that the Board deny Applicant's motion without any comments about Applicant's proposed Protective Order, and certainly did not mention that any Protective Order in this case should include two tiers of confidentiality. Then, on November 10, 2006, six weeks after Applicant's Motion to Compel and nearly one month after Opposer's response, Opposer filed its own Motion for Entry of Protective Order. Opposer's motion merely extends its refusal to produce documents.

Due to Opposer's lack of cooperation with the discovery process, litigation over such discovery has dwarfed the merits of the case. Yet the underlying discovery issue is quite straightforward – Opposer has failed to produce any documents, has failed to adequately respond to interrogatories, and has shown no need for the two-tiered Protective Order it urges. Curiously, Opposer argues that certain documents are too sensitive to produce without an “attorneys eyes only” level of protection. Just what those are and why they require such high level of confidentiality is left to speculation. This is an application for a trademark registration; it is not a trade secret case. Indeed, Applicant has not sought trade secrets or any information that deserves the characterization “highly confidential.” Proof of that may be found in the fact that Applicant already produced its documents without any protective order.

Nor may it be said that Applicant has demanded uncompromising acceptance of its demands. To the contrary, Applicant offered various compromises to its discovery requests, all intended to address Opposer’s concerns (assuming those concerns were, in fact, genuine). See August 11, 2006 correspondence (attached to Applicant’s Motion to Compel).

Nor is Applicant unwilling to enter a protective order. But there has been no showing here, much less the very substantial showing, of a compelling need for an “attorneys eyes only” provision. Where, as here, Applicant is a small company, the capacity of an adversary to designate as “highly confidential” information that then is foreclosed to the Applicant to review threatens a genuine hardship to Applicant, and thereby potentially frustrates the orderly administration of this action. It can scarcely be controversial that Applicant’s counsel needs to review the discovery documents with the Applicant both to understand the significance of the produced material, render advice respecting the produced material and to aid in determining strategy going forward. Given the Opposer’s scorched earth approach to even producing a minimal amount of the discovery requested by Applicant bodes ill for a discriminating and nuanced application of the restrictive category of “attorneys eyes only.” The point, ultimately, is very simple: discovery is a mechanism to advance resolution of matters through the exchange of information, not a procedural weapon to frustrate that exchange in the hope that such frustration will exhaust the Applicant's enthusiasm for registration of its proposed mark.

Accordingly, for these reasons, and for those previously advanced in its earlier memoranda, Applicant respectfully requests that the Board grant its Motion to Compel Discovery and Extend Applicant's Time to Take Discovery and for Protective Order and deny Opposer's Motion For Entry of Protective Order.

Respectfully Submitted,

THELEN REID & PRIEST, LLP
