Foreign investors in VSIP appreciate its support for their business operations. Following are opinions of some of the foreign investors.

(QQ)Korea United Pharm. Int'l

KUPI has invested US $ 6.2 million in building a pharmaceutical factory in VSIP. Work on the project started in December 2001 and was completed in May last year. The company began to launch two tonic medicines on the market this year, the Homtamin and Homtamin Ginseng. It expects to earn US $ 3 million this year.

"Our products were introduced into Vietnam 10 years ago, but we believe that production in Vietnam will bring about more profit," says Won-Ho Song, deputy general director of KUPI. The company will commission an injection line and an ointment line in the future.

Song says VSIP has a favorable location, and a clean environment that is suitable for pharmaceutical production. "We appreciate the park's services, especially its free-of-charge support for the completion of investment procedures."

Kingmaker Footwear Holdings Limited

The Hong Kong-owned King-maker Footwear produces leather shoes for export under famous brands such as Nautica, Caterpillar, Elefanten, Timberland and Sperry. The company has invested US $ 35 million in building a shoe factory in VSIP. The factory started operation in 2001, providing jobs for 7,500 workers.

"The operation at VSIP gives us many advantages. The labor cost is relatively cheap, but workers are skilled. The park has helped us complete administrative procedures very quickly," says Mickey Chen, Kingmaker president and chief executive.

New Toyo Paper Mill (Vietnam) Co., Ltd

The subsidiary of New Toyo International Holdings Limited of Singapore invested US $ 43 million in building a paper factory in VSIP in 1998. Two years later, the company began to introduce to the local market its AnAn and Pulpy-branded pocket tissues, handkerchiefs and toilet rolls.

New Toyo produces 21,000-22,000 tons of paper a year, with 80% for local sale and the rest for export to Australia, Malaysia, Hong Kong and Singapore.

Quang Dang Huynh, deputy general director of New Toyo, says the company has good relations with local authorities. "VSIP is a favorable location for our business development. We do not get into trouble with local authorities," he says.

Daily Full International Printing (VN) Co., Ltd.

This Taiwanese company specializes in paper production and printing. The company has invested US $ 3.5 million to produce computer forms, envelopes, forms, work register cards, catalogs and decals for local sale and export. It also provides printing products at customers' request.

"I think VSIP is one of the best industrial parks in Vietnam. I have traveled to many parts in the world to seek a suitable location for investment, but this is the best," says Liao Wen Chung, general director of Daily Full International Printing (VN). He says he will recommend VSIP to his business friends in Taiwan.

SV Probe Vietnam Co., Ltd.

SV Probe, incorporated in 1994, is a worldwide probe card and test interface manufacturer, using cutting edge technology to achieve rigid semiconductor test requirements.

To ensure maximum support for its customers in the semiconductor industry and further its business growth, SV Probe decided last year to invest in Asia. It set up a fully-fledged manufacturing plant in VSIP, doubling its current capacity and space. The move is part of SV Probe Group's strategy to expand business in Asia.

It says the selection of VSIP helps SV Probe Vietnam's businesses remain competitive and sustainable for the longer term in the global marketplace. Within only nine months, the company has doubled its investment commitments in the park,

Henry Wong, general director of SV Probe Vietnam, says, "These commitments, together with doubling production capacity and continuous technology upgrade, has enabled our company to support customers better and to achieve our vision of becoming an industry leader as a one-stop test solution provider in the global semiconductor market."

When it comes to men's swimwear, function overrides form.

"It's not just about something to swim in," said Jack Herschlag, executive director of the National Association of Men's Sportswear Buyers. "It's surf wear. It's loungewear."

Whether they are taking waves or taking it easy, guys have a variety of trunk styles from which to choose.

Like in women's swimwear, color has soaked the trunks. Electric shades of green, yellow, blue and orange are making powerful impressions. However, it's not only about the brights. Black looks sophisticated, and shades of brown offer richness.

The colors provide backdrops for fun prints. Say "aloha" to Hawaiian-flavored bold florals. Tropical scenes are in the picture, as are novelty designs, such as surfboards. Also, stripes and plaids are important.

As for silhouettes, "your typical swim trunk is medium-length with pockets," said Herschlag, adding that this design is popular with the older wearers while longer board shorts are hot with the younger crowd.

In high fashion, designers offer these styles and more. For instance, Anna Sui did the ubiquitous board short but also included a version of a pedal pusher in her spring men's collection.

Others advocated less coverage. Michael Kors presented a graphic-print brief at his show, as did the folks at Bally. The fitted square-cut trunk, a la Burt Lancaster in "From Here to Eternity," has shaped up as a favorite with designers the past few seasons.

On Mainstream Street in Middle America, the skimpier styles don't hold much water. However, on Madison Avenue in New York and Rodeo Drive in Beverly Hills, they create traffic at designer shops.

"These are for people who want to look different," Herschlag said. "They want to be seen. This is what you see at South Beach (in Miami) and Fire Island (in New York) and fancy resorts."

If being this fashion-forward doesn't appeal to a guy, he can look back. The cabana sets of the '60s have re-emerged. Dillard's at West Town Mall carries the matching shirts and trunks.

"It's a bit of a nostalgia trip," Herschlag said. "Back then, it was like they were dressing for some grand party, when all they were doing was going to the beach."

Another throwback is the terry-cloth zippered shirt as a cover-up. Tanks, muscle shirts and logo tees can also be paired with trunks.

SHOW: Today (7:00 AM ET) - NBC

April 16, 2004 Friday

LENGTH: 863 words

HEADLINE: Interior designer Sheila Bridges gives tips on decorating in the Asian chic style

ANCHORS: CAMPBELL BROWN

BODY:

CAMPBELL BROWN, anchor:

This morning on TODAY'S HOME, Asian chic. Clean lines and graceful forms can give your home a certain serenity with an Asian twist. Sheila Bridges is a TODAY contributor and host of "Designer Living."

And, Sheila, good morning to you.

Ms. SHEILA BRIDGES (Interior Designer): Good morning, Campbell.

BROWN: So, define Asian chic for us. Clean lines...

Ms. BRIDGES: Right. Clean...

BROWN: ...not a lot of clutter.

Ms. BRIDGES: Exactly. Clean lines, simple forms, not a lot of clutter, not a lot of ornamentations, dark woods are very, very typical, natural materials like wood or bamboo.

BROWN: And it seems like it's a lot more popular now. You--you see it everywhere.

Ms. BRIDGES: It is popular now. It's a very, very accessible style. Very, very affordable. And you can mix it in with just about any interior style, and it works.

BROWN: Let's look at some of the stuff you've brought.

Ms. BRIDGES: All right.

BROWN: Starting with the table itself, which is beautiful.

Ms. BRIDGES: The table is beautiful. It's a cherrywood table. It was designed by David Chu for Nautica. And it's just a very, very classic Asian table. Not a lot of heavy ornamentation. Very, very practical. Sort of an open form in terms of the--in terms of the design.

BROWN: And I love what you put with it, which is...

Ms. BRIDGES: These leather...

BROWN: ...ottomans or benches.

Ms. BRIDGES: ...benches. Which...

BROWN: Are they comfy?

Ms. BRIDGES: Which are comfortable.

BROWN: Yeah, actually.

Ms. BRIDGES: Really flexible. You could use them--mix them with regular or traditional dining chairs or use them just, you know, plainly as a--as a bench.

BROWN: And the dishes are--if you're not going to spend a lot of money, you're not going to buy a new table...

Ms. BRIDGES: Right.

BROWN: ...this is a cheap way to go.

Ms. BRIDGES: This is.

BROWN: I've seen--I mean, you can get dishes and m--mix and match for just a few bucks, even.

Ms. BRIDGES: Exactly. We took regular, standard, white, everyday plates and we mixed them with these Asian, sort of square-shaped china from Pearl River. Really inexpensive. All these things under $10.

BROWN: These are pretty too. Give it a little color.

Ms. BRIDGES: Yeah. And they add color and style and just a little bit of Asian chic without spending a lot of money.

BROWN: OK. And then these...

Ms. BRIDGES: These are jute. These are natural. These are only $2.50 a piece. And I just think they make the table look great.

BROWN: And, also, we should say, bamboo. You see bamboo kind of...

Ms. BRIDGES: You do see a lot of bamboo.

BROWN: We've got a tray over here, I think.

Ms. BRIDGES: We have a tray and a tea set also from Pearl River Mart. And this is $17.50. Bamboo and metal, really stylish. And also inaccessible. (As spoken)

BROWN: And this cabinet?

Ms. BRIDGES: This cabinet is actually...

BROWN: TV cabinet?

Ms. BRIDGES: Yeah, it's a TV cabinet, stereo cabinet.

BROWN: Can I open it? Ooh, nice.

Ms. BRIDGES: We put books, a stereo. It's bamboo and pine. Pier 1 Imports for $300.

BROWN: And this is something you could do if--if your whole house isn't, obviously, so you might just want to add a piece here and there.

Ms. BRIDGES: Right.

BROWN: It gives it kind of that feel.

Ms. BRIDGES: These could match with a very, very traditional decor or something much more contemporary.

BROWN: And then the super cheap way to go, which is also really festive, are the lanterns.

Ms. BRIDGES: The lanterns are great.

BROWN: I've used these for parties before.

Ms. BRIDGES: These cost anywhere from $5 to $10. You can buy a lighting kit, these are also from Pier 1 Imports, for an additional $10. But great for a party. Great for the children's--children's rooms.

BROWN: That's what I was thinking, these would be really cute in a kid's room.

Ms. BRIDGES: Really fun and--and colorful and festive.

BROWN: And they're just paper, so if you tore it, no big deal.

Ms. BRIDGES: Exactly. No big deal.

BROWN: And finally you have?

Ms. BRIDGES: And then, finally, window treatment, which, of course, is a big deal for most people and very, very difficult. Very, very simple bamboo shade. This is from Smith and Noble from their--their mail order catalog. Comes in so many different colors, sizes, shapes, and...

BROWN: Not very expensive or...

Ms. BRIDGES: Not--not very expensive. The price ranges depending on the size of your window. But the thing that's nice about bamboo, it's a very, very natural look, not overly mem--feminine or overly masculine. And, again, can--can match pretty much with any--any decor.

BROWN: Well, Sheila Bridges, we should also mention your show is--the new season is starting as well.

Ms. BRIDGES: The new season is going to be launched in June, and it's "Sheila Bridges Designer Living" on the Fine Living Network.

BROWN: Well, great. Thank you so much for being with us.

Ms. BRIDGES: Thank you.

BROWN: And you can find more on--of Sheila's tips on our Web site at today.msnbc.com.

And we'll be back after these messages.

The history of umbrellas goes back more than 4,000 years. Originally designed as a shade from the sun in places like Egypt, Assyria, Greece and China, it was in this last nation that umbrellas were first waterproofed and used as protection from the rain.

So when you decide to tap into four millennia worth of wisdom and get yourself some folding rain protection, what should you look for?

Functionality: Is the umbrella big enough to keep you dry and strong enough to withstand any wind you may encounter with those spring showers?

Practicality: Will the umbrella be easy to handle both open and closed?

Style-ability (is that a word?): Is the umbrella a good fit with your style?

Taking all of the above criteria into account, and assuming those who care will know where to find a big old golf umbrella, we went looking for some umbrellas that might be a little more stylish:

At Parkleigh, 215 Park Ave., we saw a Lulu Guinness folding umbrella (above) with street scenes on its panels. It folds down to a package that is 9 1/2 inches long. $42.

Lulu Guinness (below right) full umbrella in pink with flowers all over it and the messages "He loves me" and "He loves me not." $30.

At Bed, Bath & Beyond, 3349 Monroe Ave., we found:

Nautica folding umbrella in navy and yellow (below left). The umbrella is 22 inches long when folded and features a handy carry strap. $14.99. Misty Harbor umbrella in a patchwork-quilt pattern. It has a 31/2-foot spread when open. $14.99.

Men's clothes combine old looks with new twists

Men's fashion looks for this year are decidedly classic. But designers are tossing in items and textures to give that classic look a twist.

Designers from Perry Ellis to Nautica to Donna Karan are pushing wool, shearling, bulky knits, basic denim and brows as staples for men's wardrobes, according to the National Association of Men's Sportswear Buyers.

For a more playful version, this season's picks add deep V-necks, oversized lapels, tucked-in sweaters, novelty belts and cropped outer-jackets.

Kids urged to get out and vote on state color

Crayola wants kids to get out and vote this year! No, not in November, but in July. And not for president, but for new crayon names.

The State Your Color campaign urges children to base names on famous state figures, landmarks, cities, natural wonders, historical events, symbols or anything else for which a state is best known.

The polls are open until July 31 when a special Crayola committee will convene to select a crayon name to represent each state in the Union.

Crayon names and their founding "fathers" and "mothers" will be announced in November. Winners will receive one of the first 64 boxes made.

For information, visit www.crayola.com/state.

VF Corporation's efforts to expand into higher-priced sportswear with designer brands appeared to pay off yesterday as the maker of Lee and Wrangler jeans reported higher quarterly earnings.

Last year VF bought Nautica Enterprises, the maker of sportswear and Earl jeans, in an effort to grow its market beyond discount stores and mid-tier department stores.

In the first quarter VF earned Dollars 103.9m, or 93 cents a share, up from Dollars 92m, or 83 cents, the year before. Sales rose 15 per cent to Dollars 1.43bn from Dollars 1.25bn. The company benefited from a weaker currency, which boosted the dollar value of its sales outside the US.

Yesterday, VF said it had agreed to buy Vans Inc, the sportswear maker, for about Dollars 396m, in an effort to launch into the growing action sports market. Lauren Foster, New York

To enter, go to Bloomingdale's or visit www.nautica.com for the official rules and an entry form. Draw up a surf shirt design and graphic, write a brief statement about why you feel your creation is the most functional and stylish, and send it in by May 31.

Five finalists will win a trip to Los Angeles to create a sample of their surf shirts.

For those who prefer design critique, visit the Web site from June 28 to July 19 to vote for your favorite surf shirt. Registrants are automatically entered to win a Nautica Blue Beach Survival Kit.

The winner of the surf shirt contest will be announced July 31 and will receive $1,000 and see her product sold at Bloomingdale's.

Must-have list for drivers

Fix-A-Flat, the makers of a tire inflator, have launched a nationwide educational initiative to help drivers stay calm when faced with car trouble.

Here are the top 10 things they suggest you have on hand:

1. Flashlight with extra batteries. Helps you see under the hood and around the car after dark.
2. Road flares or reflective triangles.
3. Battery-jumper cables.
4. Tire inflator. Drivers can quickly repair flats without a car jack or spare tire.
5. Duct tape. From patching a leaky hose to tightening loose connections, it's an all around useful item.
6. Standard tool kit.
7. Bottled water. A must if your radiator -- or you -- runs low.
8. A quart of motor oil.
9. Small fire extinguisher.
10. Blanket and rags or paper towels. The blanket is for sliding under the car and the rags or paper towels are for cleaning up.

When Hawaii or another tropical paradise calls you to its shores this summer, chances are you'll need new swimwear.

This season offers styles for every body shape, and experts suggest you try them on to find what works best for you.

Whether you want to lounge by the pool or do morning laps, it's wise to have three suits: a one-piece for days when coverage is a priority; a tankini for when you want to be sexy but still covered; and a bikini for baring it all. Also, it's good to include one solid-colored swimsuit in the mix.

Whatever swimsuit style you chose, make sure it's comfortable and suits your personality - a lot of the fun of being on vacation is looking the part.

SOURCE: SPECIAL TO THE SUN

BODY:

Imagine a beautiful spring day. You've just left the ballpark and are strolling along the waterfront in the heart of downtown. When you're tired of walking, there are numerous shops and boutiques along the promenade to pique your interest and a wide variety of restaurants to choose from. There are even tables outside on the patio where you can take in the scenery while you dine and watch the sun set.

Sound like a typical day at Baltimore's Inner Harbor? Well, think again. This waterfront is in Wilmington, Del. What was once an ugly industrial area along the Christina River has been turned into a thriving tourist destination. Work began on the Riverfront revitalization project almost eight years ago, transforming abandoned warehouses and train stations into arts centers, shops and restaurants and changing a craggy shoreline into a sweeping 1.3-mile pathway.

It took more than 5,000 trees and shrubs, 36,000 grasses, perennials and annuals, and 27,600 wetland plants to turn what was once wild marshland into a lush, parklike setting. Reminders of the river's working past, when the site was one of the busiest shipyards during World War II, can be found at the Riverwalk's Dravo Plaza, which includes a once-operable crane, now painted a cheery blue and yellow.

Compared with the Inner Harbor, the Wilmington Riverfront is much smaller. However, the Wilmington Riverfront has some amenities that are not found in downtown Baltimore - most notably the free parking at both ends of the promenade.

Many of the city's cultural centers are clustered around the Riverfront area along with Frawley Stadium, home of the Wilmington Blue Rocks, a Carolina League affiliate of the Kansas City Royals. They play the Winston-Salem Warthogs tomorrow at 6 p.m. The stadium also holds concerts and other amateur sporting events. Oh, and parking is free at the stadium, too, and there's more than enough space for everyone who comes to a game.

There's plenty to see and do along the Riverfront. You can begin your trip at the Tubman-Garrett Riverfront Park, named for Harriet Tubman and Wilmington abolitionist Thomas Garrett, who hid slaves traveling the Underground Railroad. At the other end of the Riverwalk at 1 S. Market St. is the Shipyard Shops retail center featuring such outlet stores as Nautica and L.L. Bean. Remember that there's no sales tax in Delaware. (Just don't tell Comptroller Schaefer what you're up to.) Call 302-425-5000.

Some other spots worth checking out along the Riverfront are listed below:

Bank One Center, 800 S. Madison St., 888-862-ARTS: The center's 25,000 square feet of gallery space holds touring arts exhibits and events throughout the year. The center is also the temporary home of the Delaware Art Museum until its new facility is completed later this year. The museum's current exhibit is The Big Picture: Large-Scale Work From the Collection of the Delaware Art Museum. An exhibit from the Smithsonian Institution of works by African-American artists opens in July. Call 302-571-9590.

Frawley Stadium, 801 S. Madison St., 302-888-BLUE: The Blue Rocks began their 2004 season this month. Tickets start at $5 and go all the way to $9 for the really expensive seats along the first-base line. Group rates and picnic plans are available.

Riverfront Market, Market Street at the Christina River, 302-425-4454: The area market in what was once the Berger Brothers furniture warehouse features vendors selling fresh fruit, flowers, seafood, meat, bread, deli meats and even sushi. Harry's Seafood Grill is adjacent to the market. Call 302-777-1500 for reservations at the restaurant.

Delaware Center for Contemporary Arts, 200 S. Madison St., 302-656-6466: The museum is one of the most renowned galleries for contemporary art on the East Coast. It is housed in what was once a railroad passenger-car factory. The gallery is designed as two intersecting indoor "streets" with clusters of individual galleries. Current exhibits include Bridging Structure to Form, a collection of silver and cement jewelry and Drawings by Lightboxes.

Kalmar Nyckel, docked near the Shipyard Shops, 302-429-SHIP: Delaware's tall ship is a replica of the Swedish ship that brought Delaware's first European settlers to the banks of the Christina River in 1638. The ship is open for tours and excursions.

Kahunaville, 550 S. Madison St., 302-571-8402: Volcanoes, dancing waterfalls, hula dancers and talking tiki trees set the party atmosphere at this waterfront night spot. The club's large outdoor deck presents local and national bands throughout the summer.

Joe's Crab Shack, 600 S. Madison St., 302-777-1803: This family-friendly seafood restaurant is owned and operated by Landry's Seafood, the second-largest seafood-restaurant company in the country.

Iron Hill Brewery and Restaurant, 710 S. Madison St., 302-658-8200: This is the fourth location of the Wilmington-based brewery and restaurant. Diners can sit in the large dining room or outside on the restaurant's large porch.
Getting there

Wilmington is about 1 1/2 hours from Baltimore. Take Interstate 95 North to Exit 6 in Wilmington and turn right onto Maryland Avenue. Follow the signs to the Riverfront, turning right just before the first traffic light. Turn right onto South Madison Street.
For more regional trips, see Page 42.

BYLINE: By Bloomberg News

BODY:

The Warnaco Group, the maker of Calvin Klein jeans and Olga bras, said yesterday that it had first-quarter net income of $20.2 million after emerging from bankruptcy protection a year earlier.

Net income was 44 cents a share, compared with $22.3 million, or 49 cents a share, a year earlier, when it reported results for a two-month period after exiting Chapter 11 protection, the New York-based company said.

Sales in the period, which ended April 3, were $393.3 million.

Sales of Calvin Klein underwear and jeans were better than expected. Warnaco is introducing a Choice Calvin Klein underwear in July to bolster demand among younger shoppers and is expanding product lines with Nautica women's swimwear and JLo by Jennifer Lopez lingerie.

Profit excluding certain items was 51 cents a share. On that basis, Warnaco was expected by analysts surveyed by Thomson First Call to earn 47 cents.

DVD sales, parks good for Disney The Houston Chronicle May 13, 2004, Thursday

SECTION: BUSINESS; Pg. 2

LENGTH: 512 words

HEADLINE: DVD sales, parks good for Disney

SOURCE: Houston Chronicle News Services

BODY:

The Walt Disney Co. reported sharply higher second-quarter income Wednesday on the strength of increased DVD sales and strong attendance at its theme parks, balanced by losses at its film studio.

Encouraged by the trends at the parks and cautiously optimistic about the effect of management changes at its ABC Television network, Disney raised its full-year outlook for the second time, saying it expects earnings growth of "50 percent or more" in 2004, barring certain developments, such as the sale of its retail store chain.

The media company reported net income of $ 537 million, or 26 cents per share, for the quarter ended March 31, compared with $ 314 million, or 15 cents per share for the same period last year.

That gain allowed Disney to absorb losses for box-office flop The Alamo and animated feature Home on the Range in the quarter, executives said.

Separately, Disney film unit Miramax said that its founders, Bob and Harvey Weinstein, were in talks with Disney to acquire the studio's stake in Fahrenheit 9/11, the controversial Michael Moore documentary that Disney said it would not distribute.

In other earnings:

AnnTaylor Stores' earnings jumped 77 percent on growing sales in its latest quarter.

The New York-based women's clothing chain reported earnings of $ 31.8 million, or 65 cents a share, on sales of $ 433.2 million for its first quarter, which ended May 1. In the same period last year, it earned $ 17.9 million, or 26 cents a share, on sales of $ 426 million.

Jack in the Box posted a 20 percent jump in profit for its latest quarter, handily beating Wall Street estimates, helped by higher sales and lower beef costs. The San Diego-based operator and franchiser of hamburger restaurants also raised its 2004 earnings estimates.

Strong sales helped Federated Department Stores double its first-quarter earnings compared with a year ago, exceeding Wall Street's estimate. The Cincinnati-based company operates more than 450 stores in 34 states, including Macy's and Bloomingdale's.

Warnaco Group said it posted a first-quarter profit on unexpectedly strong sales. Calvin Klein underwear and newly licensed Nautica swimsuits boosted sales, the company said. Warnaco is introducing Choice Calvin Klein underwear in July to spur demand among younger shoppers and also is expanding product lines with JLO by Jennifer Lopez lingerie.

Aramark , which provides food services in hospitals, prisons, and other institutions, said its profit rose 6.5 percent in the latest quarter.

The Philadelphia-based company reported net income of $ 46.65 million, or 24 cents a share, for the fiscal second quarter ended April 2. That compares with the prior year's $ 43.8 million, or 22 cents a share.

Petroleo Brasileiro , Latin America's biggest company by market value, had its first decline in profit in more than a year in the first quarter because of delays setting up oil rigs off Brazil's coast.

Pep Boys, which sells auto parts and services vehicles, said it had a first-quarter profit as sales rose 11 percent from 2003.

Shoppers get ready. There's a new store in town.

A Nautica clothing store opened last Friday at Prime Outlets Huntley. It's located near Nine West and Bose in the outlet mall at Route 47 and Interstate 90.

Nautica is one of several stores that are planned as part of a turnaround at the Huntley shopping center, which hasn't been the commercial gem village officials had hoped for when it first opened a decade ago.

In an interview with the Daily Herald earlier this year, David Phillips of Prime Retail, which operates the mall along with 17 other outlet shopping centers across the country, said his company is working to improve its Huntley location with higher-quality stores.

Farewell: Huntley residents are mourning the loss of Donald Tessmer this week.

The 76-year-old life resident of Huntley died last weekend after suffering a stroke. After talking with friends and family about him, I learned quickly that Tessmer made quite an impact in the community simply by giving of his time.

His laundry list of community involvement includes more than 30 years in the Huntley Cemetery Association and nearly 25 years with the Huntley Fire Protection District as a volunteer firefighter. He served on the boards of both organizations.

Tessmer was a longtime Lions Club member, coached Little League in Huntley and played Santa at local holiday festivities.

When I asked his friends and family why Tessmer was so involved, they simply told me that was the kind of guy he was.

"He wanted to help the community - that's what he was there for," said Bob Kunde, a current Huntley fire trustee and former firefighter who worked with Tessmer.

It's sounds like Huntley is loosing a true giver.

No, it's not Dave: Huntley Village Manager Carl Tomaso has a new right-hand man helping him at village board meetings now that Dave Johnson has left the village payroll.

Adam Watts joined the village staff as a management assistant. His first day was April 15. He's been at village board meetings next to Tomaso helping out with PowerPoint presentations. Outside the board room, Watts serves as a general assistant to Tomaso.

The village is currently seeking a replacement for Johnson, who served as assistant village manager up until the end of April when he left for a new job in Channahon.

Sign up: Want to learn CPR? The Huntley Fire Protection District offers monthly classes on cardiopulmonary resuscitation and the next one is Monday.

The class runs from 6 to 9 p.m. and costs $20. Along with CPR, you will learn how to use a defibrillator. Call (847) 669-5066 for more details, including class location.

Charlestowne Mall has announced five winners in the My Mother's Child photo look-a-like contest.

Mary and Emily Kroger of Batavia took top honors in the contest sponsored through Picture People.

"All three of my daughters look like me," Mary said. "However, from the day Emily was born, everyone said she was the spitting image of me."

The Krogers received a family fun night courtesy of Pheasant Run resort.

St. Charles residents Carol Denofrio and Lisa Pearson and Deborah and Ashley Windisch took second and third place respectively.

Receiving honorable mentions were Mary Ann and Annie Stoermer of St. Charles and Rebecca and Kristin Dudek of Genoa.

In the past the contest was only available to mothers and daughters. This year the Mother's Day event was expanded to include sons as well.

"We had 29 entries including two that were mother-son entries. All of these children showed an almost spooky resemblance to their mothers," said Susan Hall, marketing director for Charlestowne Mall.

Military discounts: Today marks the end of armed forces weekend at Gurnee Mills.

Nearly 60 stores throughout the mall are offering discounts for military personnel with valid identification.

Discounts range from 5 percent to 20 percent. A list of participating stores is available at the information booth at Entry E.

Shirts to lunch: Two new stores recently opened at Woodfield Shopping Center.

Kuhlman's now operates in the Nordstrom wing. The retailer features men's custom shirts.

Samurai Sam's, a teriyaki grill, also opened. The eatery featuring Asian food is located in the Sears wing.

Samurai Sam's was named number one Asian Fast Food for the second year in a row by Entrepreneur Magazine.

Showtime: Puppets are the focus of the next kid's event at Golf Mill in Niles.

Golf Mill Shopping Center and Chicago Parent Magazine are presenting The Puppet Place Saturday.

The show is expected to create a comedy story theater for kids, complete with audience participation. The show starts at 11:30 a.m. next to the Children's Place.

Now open: Nautica Factory Store is now open at Prime Outlets Huntley.

The Nautica logo can be found throughout the store including on accessories and denim merchandise.

The new store is near Nine West Outlet and Bose Factory Outlet.

HEADLINE: MEN'S BATHING SUITS WADE TO THE FRONT OF STORES' SHELVES THIS YEAR

BYLINE: Renee Garrison Media General News Service

BODY:

Joel Silverfield fondly recalls a time when he never considered buying a bathing suit.

"Growing up in Columbia, South Carolina, everyone cut off their jeans to swim," Silverfield said.

Today, Silverfield prefers trunk-style suits "with a little looseness around the midriff region" that serve double duty as athletic shorts.

"I will say, I don't like to see any man wear trunks with a matching top," he added.

Silverfield should be pleased with this year's offerings.

Manufacturers including Speedo, Nautica, Tommy Hilfiger and Tommy Bahama have designed swimsuits in bold, bright colors, stripes and tropical surf florals. In addition, there are coordinating (not matching) T-shirts available in colors galore.

At $38 for trunks and $18 for screened T-shirts, Speedo swimwear is "flying out of the box" at Belk stores, said Jan Clevenger, the vice president of men's sportswear for the chain.

"The irony is that many men can go five years without buying a suit," she said. "Until June, they're on the back wall of the men's department, so customers may not even know we have it. However, this year, swimwear sales already are up 22 percent."

Clevenger said that her biggest seller in men's swimwear is the Nautica brand, which sells for $29.50 to $45.

"Prints are always the majority of the business," she said. "We're selling longer trunks - the 17-inch inseam in blocked colors and a 20-inch inseam in solid color cargoes - this year."

Let's not forget the gadgets: Many swimsuit styles come with a floating key fob that attaches to a pocket and keeps your car and/or hotel key safe.

Lands' End added a new "Water Wallet" to its Supplex Cargo Swim Shorts, which keeps items dry and fits perfectly in the Swim Shorts' back pocket.

Speedo's latest innovation is the waterproof "Blocket Pocket," a detachable waterproof insert that keeps valuables high and dry.

After four years of extensive research and development that began with sharks and ended with input from Olympic swimmers, Speedo also unveiled the FSII - a sleek, full-body suit.

This swimwear features multiple fabrics including the Flexskin (a smooth fabric for flexibility), silicone applied to the chest and back areas, and the "neutralizer," a rougher fabric on the inner forearm so that swimmers can feel the water.

There are different models for freestylers, backstrokers and breaststrokers, all designed to give the Olympic swimmers an edge at the Athens games this summer. But the suits will be available to anyone who likes the fast lane on the www.speedousa.com Web site for a retail price of about $300.

Outlet sold for $6.1M

BODY:

Long Island's first outlet shopping center has been sold to a Manhattan-based real estate investor who hopes to revive the half-vacant property, possibly by bringing in traditional retailers, the new owner said yesterday.

Bellport Outlet Center I, a 96,000-square foot property south of Sunrise Highway at Station Road, was sold by Union Labor Life Insurance Co. to AlRose Bellport LLC, an affiliate of AlRose Realty Inc., for $6.1 million.

Union Labor, known as Ulico, held a $10-million loan secured by the property and initiated foreclosure proceedings against one-time owner Prime Retail Inc. in 2001. Ulico acquired the center, a foreclosure sale last year, for $5.1 million.

Allen Rosenberg, president of Alrose, a resident of Woodsburgh, said the deal, at about $60 per square foot, was too good to pass up. "It looks like there is so much upside ... The demographics are great."

The center, whose outlet tenants include such well-known brands as Nike, Nautica, Liz Claiborne and Bass, brought a new concept in retailing to Long Island: a concentration of manufacturer-direct stores in a suburban-style shopping center. Bellport, however, was eclipsed by the larger and, some say, better-located and better-marketed Tanger Outlet Center at the end of the Long Island Expressway in Riverhead, which opened in 1994, two years after the first Bellport stores.

"Riverhead came along and beat the hell out of Bellport," said Rosenberg, adding that he believed that some of Tanger's novelty has worn off and shoppers have returned to the Bellport outlets, where he said some tenants are eager to expand.

Rosenberg, who owns about 750,000 square feet of property on Long Island, mostly community shopping centers, said he is considering bringing in traditional retailers, such as a supermarket, to the property.

Also, Rosenberg said there is a possibility that some tenants at Bellport Outlet Center II and III, north of Sunrise Highway, might want to move to his center if a long-discussed deal to bring The Home Depot to the site comes to fruition and forces them out. "It's a very fluid situation," he said.

Don Harrison, a Home Depot spokesman, said the company had no immediate plans for a store in Bellport.

Station Plaza LLC, a company owned by developer Sid Farber's widow, Countess Nadia de Navarro Farber of Belle Terre, bought all of Bellport II and III in 2002. Representatives could not be reached for comment.

The Bellport centers, which eventually totaled 291,248 square feet, were developed in three phases beginning in 1991 and operated by the McArthur/Glen Group of Virginia, which later merged with the Michigan-based Horizon Group. In 1998, Horizon merged with Maryland-based Prime.

Adam Silber, president of Great Neck-based Silber Investment Properties, who brokered the sale to AlRose, will represent AlRose in filling the vacant stores.

Supermodel snacks

Being a mom and model just isn't enough for Heidi Klum. The Victoria's Secret supe, who just birthed her first baby, has put her name (and likeness) on a new line of fruit-flavored candy that will be unveiled in the U.S. next month. The yogurt-based snacks are fat-free, like their namesake, and come in three chewy varieties. Klum has already teamed up with German treat maker Katjes in Europe; this will be her first sweet foray into the U.S. candy market.

Water togs

They've got impossible tans, perfectly windswept hair and bodies that blow landlubbers' out of the water. Now, the U.S. Sailing Team, U.S. Disabled Sailing Team and U.S. Youth World Team have new wardrobes, too, thanks to Nautica. The sporty clothing brand has outfitted the teams for appearances including their upcoming trip to the Summer Olympic Games in Athens, Greece. "I have always been inspired by the sea," said designer David Chu at the lush New York Yacht Club this week, where he was joined by some of the sailors, dressed in cropped khakis, navy polos and blazers. Copying the laid-back style is easy. Getting that tan may be tougher.

Charitable spending

We love it when shopping helps more people than just our credit-card companies. Next week, take part in the first "Shop 4 Class" promotion by spending some dough at city shops. A portion of proceeds from your spree will be used to provide books for public-school classrooms, benefitting kids in kindergarten through third grade.

Participating retailers include ABC Carpet & Home, C.O. Bigelow Chemists, Pearl River Mart, Macy's Herald Square, Hershey's Times Square (above), Li-Lac Chocolates, Alphabets, Flight 001, Brooks Brothers and Bliss Spas (visit www.nycvisit.com/shop for a complete list of stores and more info). The week-long event starts tomorrow.

Ballot beauty

When Patricia Field makes a statement, she makes it stylishly. The flame-haired designer has created a tank (below) to encourage American youth to vote, instead of "allowing the senior segment to run the show," she said in a statement. $24; find it at www.patriciafield.com, or at her 382 W. BODY:

When Amy Parise arrived at the just-opened Chicago Premium Outlets mall in northwestern Aurora Wednesday at 11 a.m., it was a mob scene.

News reports said traffic was backed up for miles down I-88 to Farnsworth Avenue, and it took the Geneva woman a half-hour just to park her car.

But after about four hours of shopping and a few hundred dollars spent, Parise thought it was worth it.

"It's great," she said, carrying bags from Adidas, Gap Outlet, Tommy Hilfiger, Nautica, Brooks Brothers Factory Store and Little Me. "A lot more stores are open than I thought would be."

Her only criticism was the lack of restaurants in the 438,000- square-foot outdoor mall. It opened with 92 stores and eateries Wednesday. By the summer's end, management expects all the 120 storefronts full, Assistant General Manager Cort Carlson said. It should employ about 800 people on average.

"I don't think they had enough parking, but it's beautiful," said Judy Day of Naperville, who compared the shopping center to Lighthouse Mall outside Michigan City, Ind.

Day was worn out after shopping at stores such as Ann Taylor Factory Store, Le Gourmet Chef and Maidenform.

"Most of the stores seemed to have some kind of sale going on," she said.

Although dozens of shoppers were forced to park illegally, most praised the open-air mall for its layout, the abundance of benches and the overhangs over some of the walkways to fend off bad weather.

Despite the attention on day one, local retailers such as Geneva Commons in Geneva and Charlestowne Mall in St. Charles don't believe the outlet mall will stomp on its sales.

Tom Craven, general manager of Charlestowne, said he was confident the outlet shops wouldn't cut into the mall's profits.

"I think it's more of a tourist destination," Craven said of Chicago Premium Outlets.

While Geneva Commons has many of the same national chains that will offer those wares at the new mall at discounts from 25 to 65 percent, senior property manager James Pratt also didn't see it as a threat.

The drive from his core area in central Kane County will deter some people, Pratt said, as will the lack of convenient parking. But more than that, the Commons and Chicago Outlets simply draw from different markets, he said.

David Phillips, executive vice president of Prime Outlets in Huntley at the north end of Kane County, also remained optimistic about the opening of the new outlet mall.

He pointed out that several of the most popular retail malls in the country are Chicago-area malls that coexist profitably, and there should be no reason outlet malls can't do the same.

Prime Outlets draws from Rockford east to Barrington, and Crystal Lake south to Elgin - all a far cry from Aurora, he said.

Phillips added that with more locations of some brands in the areas customers will get to know those brands better, and Chicago Outlets represents a breaking down of the traditional barriers many chains had put to locating outlets near metropolitan areas. Both those factors will benefit Prime, Phillips said.

"We think in the long run it's going to be a great help," Phillips said.

But Leo J. Shapiro, of the Chicago-based retail research firm Leo J. Shapiro & Associates, doesn't share the competitors' optimism about the outlets opening.

"The idea that it does not compete with everybody is a convenient fiction no one believes," Shapiro said.

MID Valley Megamall took on a party air recently when the latest fashion trends in a Spring Summer collection was unveiled at the ground floor.

Drinks were flowing and food was aplenty. The happy crowd cheered the arrival of guests who arrived in style for the Jump Start Fashion @ MidValley Party.

Showing off the season's trends were various fashion labels including Kookai Paris, Morgan de Toi, Philosophy, Salablanca, Phenomenal, Amp, Arizali, Adidas, Quicksilver, Guess Kids and Osh Kosh B'Gosh.

According to Mid Valley City Sdn Bhd's director of advertising and promotions Kung Sun Ai, fashion would be in full bloom throughout the mall.

"If you love fashion, this will be an exciting time for you. Whether you are looking for that perfect floral dress or matching accessories for that colourful Spring Summer outfit, you'll be spoilt for choices here," she said.

The highlight of this season's promotion was the mall's own Spring Summer Fashion Party late last month. The centre court was turned into a fashion runway with gorgeous models sashaying down the catwalk outfitted in the latest trends in town.

"Fashion enthusiasts can find colourful knitwear from Kookai Paris, classy looks from Zara, sleek and sexy wear from Amp, shirts and playful ties from Raoul, funky outfits and accessories from THREEPOINTSIX, hiphop style from Adidas Originals and stylish career wear from Edmundser," said Kung. The party ended on May 3 with a parade of awe-inspiring clothes from TopShop, TopMan, Guess, Celia Loe, Esprit, Elle, Urban & Co., B.U.M. Equipment, Diesel, Giordano, Renoma, Padini, Quicksilver, Reebok, Nautica and many other labels.

BYLINE: Kristen Andresen

BODY:

A few weeks ago, my friend Steve left a cryptic message on my voice mail.

He needed to know where to buy a suit, cheap - not to be confused with a cheap suit.

Now Steve is a stylish guy. Even more so since he met his girlfriend, but that's another column altogether. So I was a bit confused why he needed my advice. When I called him back, he filled me in.

Steve works at the University of Maine, and a colleague in the Upward Bound program had a challenge. One of her advisees, Ben Reed, had received $200 in donations from faculty, staff and students at Waterville High School. The money was intended to purchase a suit to see Ben through his prom, graduation and his next four years at Bates College, where he received a substantial scholarship.

Ben is an honors student with "an incredible drive to be successful," said his UB adviser, Lynn Ploof-Davis, who is based at UMaine Farmington. "What he has achieved has largely been through his own intellect and creativity."

He's involved in - I'm not kidding - 26 extracurricular activities, and he's taken advanced placement courses through his entire high school career. He's funny and smart and sweet as can be. But he also had a challenging childhood and has lived away from home since last fall. To make a long story short, if anyone deserved that $200, Ben did.

Thing is, I looked high and low, and even I couldn't find him a suit, shirt, tie, shoes and belt for $200. Well, let me take that back. I couldn't get him a suit that he'd want to wear for that much, let alone accessories. I asked my editor if we could chip in with a shirt and tie. She agreed. But that still left us quite short. Then, at the last minute, a very kind donor, who wishes to remain anonymous, stepped forward to cover the difference.

I caught up with Ben and Lynn last week at Filene's, which has a wide selection of suits for men of all ages - even 17.

Ben is a rarity, especially among guys his age. He knows his own style - a blend of preppy and urban chic - and he's not afraid to show it. Lynn initially suggested the dress slacks and sport coat look, which he immediately nixed. When Lynn urged him to try a gray suit, Ben politely, but firmly, refused. Too conservative (and, truth be told, a bit too old for a high school student).

"Something about dark on top and tan on the bottom drives me insane," Ben said. "Matching colors look better to me. I know what I like and I know what I don't like, but there's a lot of in-between."

Filene's menswear associate Herb Jordan had plenty of advice - and he agreed with Ben. If you don't like the color, you'll find a dozen excuses not to wear the suit, no matter how nice it is.

Jordan recommended suit components - the men's version of separates - rather than a full suit. By buying the jacket and pants individually, men can replace a worn-out item without having to purchase a whole new suit. And it saves on tailoring because each piece is sized to fit.

"The beauty of these is that every man from the pope down the line to the low man on the totem pole wears the pants more often than the jacket," Jordan explained. "If you wear out the pants, you can buy a new pair."

When Ben emerged from the dressing room for the first time, the fit was a bit off.

"You've got big thighs," Jordan said. Then he turned to me. "I don't say that to women."

Good call.

But Ben was a sport, and he tried on the next size. The next time was a charm, though it took a little getting used-to, because dress slacks fit a little more snugly than casual khakis.

"He looks good," Jordan said, sizing up the navy blue Nautica suit, which, incidentally, was on sale. "It fits well - you're in good shape."

Next, it was off to pick out a shirt and tie, with the help of sales associate Janet Cordeiro. I had a white shirt with a lime and navy striped tie in mind. Ben definitely had other ideas. He wanted shiny - Regis Philbin-style shiny - for both. And he wanted red. I feared he'd look like a politician and urged him to pick out an off-white shirt. He relented, and we headed back to the fitting room. Not surprisingly, he was right on with the red, and the Regis.

"I'm a big fan of shiny," Ben said, laughing. "It looks nice."

He likes shiny when it comes to shoes, too. Ben immediately gravitated toward a pair of black Skechers, but when he tried them on with the suit, he didn't care for the way the loafers made it look like he had "duck feet." He didn't want anything with stitching or tassels on it either, which narrowed our options considerably. But he finally found a pair of Bass lace-ups - conservative, but not too - that were just right.

When he headed back to the dressing room to change into his street clothes, Ben was beaming. I was happy to finally be able to use my shopping powers for good (and not just a good bargain). And Lynn felt like a proud parent who was about to send her oldest son off to college.

"I am, I'm in tears," Lynn said, smiling, when Ben retreated to the dressing room one last time. "This will be something he'll remember."

Well-suited

Herb Jordan and Amy Leavitt of Filene's offer the following tips for men buying a suit:

- . Don't buy a suit if you don't like its color.
- . The cuffs of your jacket should hit the point between the heel of your hand and the knuckle on your thumb that is closest to your wrist.
- . If you tend to wear the pants of a suit more than the jacket, buy components rather than a full suit.
- . Components can eliminate the need for tailoring.
- . To see if your jacket is the right length, hold your arms at your sides and curl in your fingers. It should hit your fingertips.
- . Your jacket should be a bit slack between the shoulders. "Otherwise, you wouldn't be able to lift up your arm to drive a car, have lunch, or drink a martini," Jordan says. Or, in Ben's case, a Pepsi.
- . Your belt and shoes should match.
- . If you wear a watch, the metal of your belt buckle should match the tone of your watch.

BYLINE: Suzanne S. Brown, Denver Post Staff Writer

BODY:

The surfing life captivated many Americans in the 1950s and 1960s when Frankie and Annette harmonized on Beach Blanket Bingo Gidget kissed Moondoggie at the luau and the Beach Boys coaxed us with Let's Go Surfing now. Everybody's learning how. The lure of the waves endures in today's youth culture. WB's reality TV show, Boarding House: North Shore, the film Blue Crush and recent books such as Pipe Dreams and The Endo keep our beach fantasies alive. The beach also dominates fashion trends. Lines such as Roxy and Quiksilver attract young fans who live 1,500 miles from the nearest shore. Landlocked teens can at least look the part of the surfer girl, judging from the triangle tops, board shorts and rash guards on display in department stores.

'Surf has been an important trend for us,' says Roz Pactor, vice president and fashion director for Foley's, which has 69 stores in the West and Southwest. 'We've always done a strong tropical business. The surf look is just a younger version of that.'

Hawaiian floral and scenic prints, hot tropical colors and sporty silhouettes also owe their popularity to the surfing culture.

What's happening in the larger world of fashion molds swimwear trends, too. That is why pink - in every shade from powder to shocking - will be prevalent at the pool this summer.

If you look better in orange or yellow, blue or green, you'll find those colors in abundance, particularly when they're as bright as citrus fruits or tropical flowers.

'It's all about color,' Pactor says of swimwear and fashion in general. 'Even I, who always wear black, have been wearing color. You put on black, and it looks so last year.'

Prints get major play. In addition to floral and scenic patterns, stripes, graphics, abstracts and '60s-inspired Pucci motifs are splashed across suits.

Swimwear trends typically run a season behind what's been on the runways at the designer shows, says Jodi Randolph, senior vice president and designer for Venus USA, a Jacksonville-Fla. based company that manufactures women's swimwear and sells it via mail order and at shops such as Colorado Sun in Denver.

'It's a natural progression,' she says. 'Women need to feel comfortable wearing a clothing trend or color before they wear it in swimwear. Swimwear is the hardest thing to buy and be comfortable in; it doesn't matter how good your shape is.'

Unexpected color combinations are a trend this year. 'One that's really fresh is mixing pinks and browns,' Randolph says. 'It's a way of toning down the brightness of pink.'

Other styling details that set this year's suits apart from previous seasons, she says, are halter necklines; tops with a band of fabric that extends below the bust line and ties in the back; hardware details; and string and sash ties.

Bottoms in general are more covered than they've been in recent seasons. 'I think people are being more conservative,' Randolph says, noting Venus' sales of thongs has decreased about 5 percent.

If it has been a while since you've bought a two-piece, you're more likely to find what you want sold separately than as a set. 'It's all about separates,' says Pactor of Foley's. 'It makes so much sense. People tend to buy them not to mix and match, but for size.'

They also buy ensembles, choosing tops, pants or shorts as coverups that coordinate with their suits, says Darlys Corban, director of stores for the 31 Swim 'n Sport locations.

'We believe that they're dressing not just in a swimsuit, but in outfits that take them beyond the pool,' Corban says. 'When they buy a matching coverup, they can put on sandals and go out at night.'

Despite all the two-piece looks available, there's still a big market for one-piece suits, Corban says.

'Our best designer for one-pieces is Anne Cole, and she has become more creative, with cutouts, one-shoulder designs and using a basic color like black but putting a few pink accents with it,' Corban says.

'The missy customer doesn't want to be grandma, either.'

Swim 'n Sport, which has stores in Cherry Creek Shopping Center and Colorado Mills, merchandises suits by color, designer and style of suit so that women can be guided to the type of swimwear they want.

Corban recommends that women give themselves some time to shop for swimwear. You'll seldom find the right suit on your first attempt, she says. Plan to try on a number of suits to see what fits and flatters.

'Be willing to listen to suggestions,' she says. 'Most women are afraid of prints, but the truth is they hide all sins.'

The same can be true for suits with a plunging neckline, she says, suggesting, 'Be willing to go outside the box.'

NEW YORK -- Nautica has signed on as the official apparel sponsor of the U.S. Sailing Teams for 2004. The company will provide on-land outfits for the 130 men and women of the U.S. Sailing Team, U.S. Disabled Sailing Team and the U.S. Youth World Team -- encompassing the sailors who will participate in the Olympic Games in Athens this summer.

"I have always been inspired by the sea, and sailing is one of my favorite activities," said Nautica chief David Chu at a luncheon at the New York Yacht Club last week. "My love for the functionality of naval attire has influenced my designs since I started Nautica in 1983."

The wardrobe includes suits, blazers, furnishings, slacks, casual pants, shorts and knit shirts. The deal does not include technical attire worn while sailing.

"Nautica is a great partner for the U.S. Sailing Teams," said luncheon attendee Fred Hagedorn, chairman of U.S. Sailing's Olympic Sailing Committee. "Nautica's heritage, brand and quality reputation align well with the values and characteristics of the U.S. Sailing Teams."

On hand at the New York Yacht Club lunch were Bill Martin, president of the U.S. Olympic Committee; Nick Crow, executive director of U.S. Sailing; Eric Wiseman, chairman of VF Corp.'s sportswear and outdoor coalition; and members of the U.S. Sailing Team.

And speaking of the Olympics, Roots, the official outfitter of the U.S. Olympic Team, recently unveiled its 2004 Olympic Team Collection at an event at the NBC Experience Store in Rockefeller Center. The line, which is primarily targeted to consumers, included a summer version of the successful USA beret as well as T-shirts, sweats, jackets and a few commemorative items.

"It's all about the athletes," said Roots cofounder Michael Budman. "When the U.S. athletes walk into Olympic Stadium in Athens, it will be one of the greatest moments in their lives -- we want them to look as good as they feel and to be proud to represent the United States."

Roots will provide apparel to more than 1,000 athletes, coaches and staff. The official uniform for the Opening Ceremonies will be revealed just before the Games begin.

2-piece swim separates buoy sales; Overall number for women's suits sags, but mixed sizes, tankini trend won't fade Chicago Tribune May 29, 2004 Saturday

HEADLINE: 2-piece swim separates buoy sales;
Overall number for women's suits sags, but mixed sizes, tankini trend won't fade

BYLINE: By Becky Yerak, Tribune staff reporter.

BODY:

At age 21, Megan Weiss already owns eight swimsuits and is on the lookout for No. 9.

Browsing Thursday afternoon at Woodfield Shopping Center in Schaumburg, the Naperville hairstylist said she favors two-piece "tankinis," which consist of a top that covers part of the tummy and a bottom that rises to the navel.

"I don't really have the body for a bikini," explained Weiss, who recently shed 20 pounds but plans to stick with tankinis until she drops another 30. "The tank ones cover my stomach, so that's what I go for."

The women's swimwear industry would probably like to don a forgiving tankini itself these days--it's not as firm as it would like to be. Sales have sagged 1.3 percent to $2.18 billion for the year ended March 31.

But two-piece bathing suits, particularly those sold as separates, are becoming a lifeline for retailers and manufacturers.

"Swimwear separates are the fastest-growing segment in women's swimwear," said Marshal Cohen, chief industry analyst for market-research firm NPD Group.

Until about two years ago, a size 8 top was paired with a size 8 bottom and peddled as a set in stores. But today, women have the leeway to buy tops and bottoms in different sizes.

Those merchandising changes, coupled with a flattering cut like the tankini that wasn't even part of the lexicon until 1998, are prompting sturdier ladies to slam the door on the sort of thinking that only the buff-bodied wear two-piece swimsuits.

Nearly two-thirds of women who consider themselves overweight, as well as four out of 10 females who deem themselves obese, said they own two-piece suits, a new NPD study shows. That doesn't mean, however, they actually wear them.

Women own an average of four swimsuits, the study found, but wear only two on a regular basis.

"The advent of mix-and-match separates has made it easier to buy a swimsuit that fits," said Steven Ballt, marketing vice president for Maillot Baltex. The Montreal company's brands include Body ID, one of the three best-selling women's swimsuits in U.S. department stores.

Today, nearly 60 percent of Baltex's sales come from separates. That share has doubled from about 30 percent three years ago, when most of its business was derived either from one-piece suits or two-piece sets.

At Nautica, also one of the nation's top three brands, "separates are a big story for women now," a spokesman said. Lands' End, owned by Sears, Roebuck and Co., sees a similar trend.

The trend toward separates also appeals to women who don't consider themselves overweight.

Take Dawn Benati, an account director for Chicago advertising agency LKH&S.

She recently bought her sixth swimsuit at H&M in March. What helped seal the deal: the ability to buy a bottom in one size and a top in another.

"If you buy a size 8, it might be too big on the bottom and right on the top, or if you buy a size 6 it's the other way," said the Chicago resident, 33. "Wearing a bathing suit provokes anxieties, so when the tops and bottoms fit the way they should, you feel a little more confident."

Benati ended up with a black bikini from H&M. She paid about $10 for the bottom and $12 for the top. She typically pays $20 to $40 for her swimsuits.

A recent "Women's Swimwear Exposed" survey by NPD found such insistence on bargains is typical. It's one reason why the women's swimwear industry is having a tough go of boosting sales, experts say.

Three out of four women spend less than $50 on a swimsuit. And more than half of women wait for swimwear to go on sale before buying at least half of the time, said NPD, which surveyed more than 1,000 U.S. females.

Swimsuits are one of the biggest apparel categories that women wait to get marked down before buying, another consumer behavior researcher says.

"What women think they should pay for a swimsuit today is about the same as it was 10 years ago," said Britt Beemer, chairman of America's Research Group Ltd. "It's why Wal-Mart and Target have done so well. They're offering women choices at lower prices."

Wal-Mart Stores Inc. said women's swimsuit sales are up this year, thanks to prices that meet the criteria of most women in the NPD study. Wal-Mart prices top out at $39.66 for a full suit, while the least expensive separate can be had for $7.23.

Michelle Metcalf shops for swimsuits at Pacific Sunwear of California, but the massage therapist and telecommunications engineer tries not to pay more than $50 for a swimsuit.

"At my age I don't like paying full price," said the 35-year-old.

She ended up spending $98.92 Thursday at the Pacific Sunwear in Woodfield, adding a white bikini and a two-piece pink number with black polka dots to her collection of seven other swimsuits.

BODY:

Since its first appearance almost two decades ago, Nautica's quietly cool, preppy look has become a necessity for active guys whose clothes must "do more." By crossing classic style with performance fabrics that won't make you look like you're really headed up K2, you get clothes that are a lot tougher than they look.

There are also tons of features such as hidden pockets, reinforced knees, and sweaters in shape-retaining blended yarns. Smart pants repel wrinkles and stains, and are reinforced with a bit of lycra so they head in the same directions you do. And sport jackets and outerwear have hidden gussets so you can move easily.

The result is garb that will keep you feeling and looking cool this summer and beyond.

Summer is a time of infinite possibilities. To make sure that you enjoy each and every delicious moment to the max, we've rounded up some of the coolest clothes, chicest accessories and a bunch of other great stuff--all inspired by the season's ultimate activities sip some lemonade Forget those fancy designer waters and revved-up power drinks. There are certain summer pleasures that simply can't be improved upon, like sipping a glass of old-fashioned lemonade. Whether you squeeze it yourself or buy it from the kid on the corner, there's no more stylish way to keep your cool.

have a clambake You don't need an excuse to party. Carefree days (and nights) are an open invitation to celebrate the season. Though lobster, corn on the cob and iced tea may be on the menu, it's not about the food but the 'tude. Gather friends around an open fire, blast some Beach Boys, and get in touch with your inner Gidget.

browse a flea market Sure, you can satisfy a shopping fix by driving to the mall. But nothing beats a stroll through an open-air market. Discover the hidden charms of the one-of-a-kind find--be it a country quilt or an Elvis lamp. There are treasures lurking around every corner ... If you know where to look.

tend your garden The next time you're perusing the self-help section of your local bookstore, consider this: There's no better way to soothe your soul, clear your head, and bring out your nurturing instincts than by getting organic. Plunge your hands into the soft earth (manicure be damned) and get your digs in. Make the world--or at least your flower beds--a prettier place.

see the sights There's no place like home? True. But with all due respect to Dorothy, everyone could use a change of scenery now and then. The wide world beckons; isn't it time you responded? Lie on a black-sand beach. Gaze from the observation deck of the Eiffel Tower. Flirt shamelessly with a guy named Francois, or Serge, or ... well, you get the idea.

chill at home Roam If you want to, but sometimes nirvana is right in your very own backyard. There are clear advantages to sticking close to home: no lost luggage, for one. So ditch the cell phone, set up the hammock, and swing, baby.

collect seashells A walk along the shore brings forth some delightful things--like treasures swept in by the tide, just waiting to be discovered. Seashells, one of nature's great creations, are the ultimate symbols of summer. Hold one to your ear and listen to the sound of the ocean, or bring a bit of the beach home with you to display. Summer will endure long after the season ends.

go out and play There's something about summer that lures even committed couch potatoes into the great outdoors. It's as though warm weather awakens the adventurous spirit in us all. So make your move: Paddle a kayak across a glassy lake, pedal down a country road, or hang 10 over a surfboard. Getting fit has never been so much fun.

BODY:

Prime Retail is adding some high-end retailers to its outlet centers, part of a quest to raise the bar at its properties across the country.

The Baltimore-based company, recently acquired by New Jersey's The Lightstone Group, said it had secured leases for 250,000 square feet of space in its centers in the first quarter.

Prime Outlets at Ellenton -- a star property with a high occupancy rate -- is responsible for only a small slice of that pie. The center already boasts upscale tenants including Off Fifth Saks Fifth Avenue, Tahari, Banana Republic, Tommy Hilfiger and Coach.

Later this year, Calvin Klein and Adrienne Vittadini shops will open in the Ellenton mall. Neither of those retailers has a full price or outlet store in this market.

"It's continuing with getting these designer brands in here," said Deborah Detweiler, marketing manager for Prime Outlets at Ellenton.

At the International Council of Shopping Centers annual spring conference in Las Vegas last week, Prime Retail President Robert Brvenik said the company has a new outlook and is determined to be more "hip" than it may have seemed in the past.

Prime will reinvest in existing centers, adding more upscale tenants and embarking on a "visual campaign" that will change the look and feel of some of them, he said.

The tenants Prime recently announced aren't all designer names, but at least half of the stores on the list represent well-known brands. Banana Republic and Bostonian/Clarks both show up on the list three times, Adrienne Vittadini and Nautica are both slotted for two stores, and Coach and Brooks Brothers are both on tap for one store.

Calvin Klein is expected to arrive at the Ellenton center in the fall to take one of its larger units at 6,800 square feet, Detweiler said. The scope of merchandise for the store isn't firm yet.

Women's apparel and accessories retailer Adrienne Vittadini could arrive earlier, moving into a 3,465-square-foot space previously occupied by Ellen Tracy, she said. The Ellen Tracy store closed last month, she said.

Both Calvin Klein and Adrienne Vittadini are brands customers have been asking for, Detweiler said.

The Children's Place is Prime Outlets at Ellenton's newest addition, and a Stride Rite/Keds/Sperry store is slated to open next.

NEW YORK -- More than a decade after Madonna ignited the innerwear-outerwear trend in her 1991 Blonde Ambition tour when she wore Jean-Paul Gaultier's bullet-shaped bustiers, mainstream America has finally embraced this dual-purpose dressing, according to NPDFashionworld.

The Port Washington, N.Y.-based consumer marketing firm reported that the idea of camis, tank tops, boxers and pajama pants worn to the shopping mall, or as loungewear and sleepwear, has made a permanent mark with adults and teens.

Information gathered by NPD from its online consumer panel of 10,000 women over the past 12 months concluded that there is a significant contingent of women -- though not a majority -- who appear comfortable wearing sleepwear items as casual sportswear or ready-to-wear.

"The big news is 42 percent of women over 18 are wearing these items, and so are 25 percent of women over 40," said Marshal Cohen, NPD's chief industry analyst. "I make sure I speak to 100 consumers a week."

He said that on a recent client presentation trip, which encompassed the West Coast, the Midwest and the Southeast, "many women were wearing innerwear as outerwear."

Overall, the report said about one out of four women and four out of 10 teen girls agree with this statement: "I often wear innerwear or sleepwear items as part of my casual wardrobe."

Here's the lowdown on what 10,000 women and teens said they "strongly agree or somewhat agree" with:

I sometimes wear men's or boys' items like boxers, pajama pants or ribbed shirts as sleepwear: 63 percent women, 75 percent teens.

I wear A shirts [athletic tanks] or ribbed tank tops exclusively as a casual outerwear piece: 56 percent women, 64 percent teens.

With today's fashions, it doesn't matter if a woman's or girl's bra straps are showing: 41 percent adults, 61 percent teens.

I sometimes wear a sheer blouse or shirt that shows my bra underneath: 22 percent women, 24 percent teens.

I only wear a cami if it has a shelf-lined bra: 44 percent women, 37 percent teens.

I often wear innerwear or sleepwear items as part of my regular, casual clothing wardrobe: 26 percent adults, 44 percent teens.

I sometimes wear boys' or men's items such as boxers, pajama pants or ribbed shirts as casual clothing: 29 percent adults, 40 percent teens.

I sometimes wear pants, shorts or skirts low on my hips so my panties or thong are exposed: 5 percent adults, 21 percent teens.

Regarding the question of enhanced comfort, Cohen said: "Manufacturers kept on telling me it's all about tailored clothing right now. I wasn't hearing that from women or seeing it on the street. In the report, cotton and spandex blends and synthetic fibers scored very high, and 54 percent of consumers said they look to stretch for comfort."

Cinnaminson site has variety of brands

Courier-Post Staff CINNAMINSON

Ileana Martinez left the new Outlet MarketPlace with a shopping bag in her hand and a smile on her face.

She was happy with the bargains -- and she was pleased to find a smorgasbord of fresh retailers in the space vacated two years ago when bankrupt discounter Ames closed its doors.

"I got three outfits, all name brands, for my husband for $42," said Martinez, of Pennsauken. "And it felt good to see a new store here because we've all been waiting and waiting."

What Martinez and other shoppers found is a new concept store for Vanity Fair, the multi-brand operator of VF Village, the outlet titan in Reading, Pa.

"Here, we're bringing the outlet to the customer instead of making the customer go to the outlet," said Jane Webster, marketing director.

In addition to VF's brands -- Vanity Fair, Lee, Wrangler, Healthtex and JanSport -- are such well-known labels as London Fog, Farberware, Welcome Home, Book Cellar and Black & Decker.

Among the wares: Hardback self-help books, three for $5; a Tommy Hilfiger brassiere, $14; a reconditioned Black & Decker hedge trimmer, $27.97.

"I bought Levi shorts and Nautica shirts," Martinez noted.

The typical VF Outlet shopper is a woman 35 or older, but the retailer is hoping the addition of male-oriented brands such as Black & Decker will attract more men.

Webster said VF chose Cinnaminson to launch the concept because of the high traffic level on Route 130 and the township's relative proximity to Reading.

"It's close enough that we can be very hands on,' Webster said.

In shopping for real estate, VF might have been a kid in a candy store, looking for square footage similar to that emptied in recent years by Ames, Bradlees and Kmart.

"The Wal-Marts are all moving up to super stores, but 70,000 square feet is still too big for most single retailers,' Webster noted.

VF retrofitted the interior in a bright, industrial style, with open rafters and polished, concrete floors. Bushel baskets display ladies' T-shirts, priced at $3.

In addition to the no-frills decor, the operation also saves money with central checkout and a single manager who oversees all the brands. VF will roll out its second marketplace in September in Manchester, Conn.

In other developments on the retail front:

Although 72 percent of Americans will celebrate Father's Day on June 20, consumers will be spending less on Dad. The average holiday expenditure will be $86.19, compared to $99.65 last year, according to a poll by the National Retail Federation.

According to the poll, women are reining in their paternal expenditures. The typical female will spend $89.77 on Father's Day this year, compared to $101.38 last year. Conversely, the guys are opening their wallets wider, ponying up an average $82.19, compared to $70.89 last year.

Five Below, the discounter for teens and 'tweens, has opened a second store in South Jersey, at Ellisburg Shopping Center in Cherry Hill. David Schlessinger, chief executive officer, said the retailer stepped up expansion plans in response to strong sales at its Marlton store on Route 73.

A twist on the popular dollar-store model, Five Below sells goods ranging from backpacks to plastic vomit, none priced higher than $5.

The Gap has closed its store at Echelon Mall in Voorhees. Gap Kids remains open.

Philadelphia-based PREIT, owner of the mall, is in the process of redefining the property. PREIT plans to tear down one of two vacant anchors and part of the mall and recruit a stand-alone big box retailer.

Fathers can feel sharp even without a razor, thanks to new twists in other dad-worthy gifts.

Gadget. Plumping up tires just right leads to better gas mileage, so save family road trip cash with the Smart Pressure Tire Gauge ($ 35, brookstone.com). Any father can understand the digital, color-coded display.

Clothing. Nautica's Performance Classic knit shirt ($ 40, Macy's) is blessed with the Teflon touch. Watermelon may be the color of the shirt but not of the stain--juice rolls right off.

Watch. Strapping on a 1.5-inch Wristwatch Television ($ 200, hammacher.com) doesn't look all that sophisticated. But how else can Dad watch an hour of the game while (allegedly) mowing the lawn? And it even tells time.

HEADLINE: MOM'S STILL TOPPING DAD FATHER'S DAY SPENDING TO HIT 8B

BYLINE: By SOO YOUN DAILY NEWS BUSINESS WRITER

BODY:

It's hard to find a gift for the man who has everything, but by Sunday consumers will have spent $8 billion this year trying - 20% less than they did for Mom last month.

Data entry clerk Jennis Thedison, 34, is tight with his father, so he's going to take him out shopping, to feel out what his dad wants. Thedison expects to spend $200 to $300.

But it was a totally different story for his mother, who he says has been emotionally supportive through thick and thin. He gave her $2,000 cash for Mother's Day last year, and a $599 32-inch TV this year.

"Mom sticks up for us. Even if we're wrong, she's always there. It's not because she's female and he's male (that we spend more)," Thedison said.

The traditional drop-off for Father's Day may not be so much about how people feel about dads vs. moms, but who is doing the feeling, and therefore, the spending.

"Women do a lot better planning, less money is spent instead of buying the most expensive thing already wrapped. They [men] don't shop, they buy - often at the last minute, because they feel guilty," said Faith Popcorn, of marketing and consulting firm BrainReserve.

There are also more women running single-parent households, Popcorn added.

Women are largely responsible for the drop in Father's Day spending this year. Their average gifts will fall to $89.77 from $101.38 last year, according to the National Retail Federation. More women are also shopping online, finding bargains that way, said Cheryl Bridges, of the Center for Retailing Studies at Texas A&M University.

Men, however, are reportedly spending more, averaging $82.19, up from last year's $70.89. Still, more people will shop for Father's Day this year than last, though spending per person will shrink, according to the NRF.

"Consumers still appear a little cautious when it comes to discretionary spending. Spending for Father's Day could be reflecting the impact of higher gas prices and the situation in Iraq," said Tracy Mullin, the federation's CEO.

As usual, stores are pushing a lot of electronic items. DVD recorders, which just fell through the $300 barrier, and were "barely out last year for Christmas," are the hottest must-haves, said Richard Doherty, research director for Envisioneering.

Digital cameras are still popular. The Casio Exilim slim cameras, which retail for $249.99 to $399.99 and Sony digital cameras with a small display are both in short supply, Doherty added.

To capture this market, Amazon.com is advertising a sale on all electronic equipment in the lead-up to Father's Day.

Retailers Macy's and Bloomingdale's said Lacoste polo shirts are enjoying a comeback as gifts for dad, as are similar styles from Burberry, Ralph Lauren and Tommy Hilfiger.

Grooming supplies are also being promoted - like "Everyday Thickening" shampoo from Frederic Fekkai, which doubles as body wash and sells for $20.

Grooming, gardening, and overall gender-bending feminization is a growing theme this year, especially as more and more women bring home the bacon, and men spend more time participating in household matters, says Popcorn.

But in case dad hasn't become too domesticated, Nautica is offering a stain-resistant polo shirt for $39.50.

Gifts can be more than neckties

BODY:

There was a time when a tie or a sweater might have been the only acceptable clothing gifts for Father's Day.

But thanks to the metrosexual trend, there are a slew of clothes and bath and beauty products available specifically for Dad.

"He does real well with clothing," said Westsider Veronica Veytia, who decided to buy her husband a shirt from gift shop Ruby Lola, 5860 N. Mesa. "Any kind of gadget he'd be better off selecting it himself, so I tend to give him clothing."

The shirt Veytia purchased was from Robert Graham, a designer also favored by Isha Rogers Babel who recently bought one for her father, former El Paso Mayor Jonathan Rogers.

"They're fun shirts," she said. "They've got a lot of personality, and each one is individual. One half of the shirt is plaid, and the other half of the shirt is striped."

Prices range from $90 to $100.

Mervyn's has clothing and accessories for men such as reversible basketball tops or shorts by Cheetah for $17.99, High Sierra lounge-wear pants for $20, Save the Children ties for $20, Haggard silk campshirts for $42, and H&H Men long-sleeve sportshirts for $30.

Accessories include Guess stainless steel watches for $85, Armitron sport watches for $25, and Dockers belts, wallets, and hats that cost between $18 and $28.

For men who prefer to pamper themselves, Avon and Molton Brown have gifts especially for them.

Molton Brown has a Father's Day gift set for $49 containing Recharge Black Pepper Body Wash, Supershave Olibanum -- a moisturizing cream with olibanum frankincense -- and Ultra-Light Baj Ji Hydrator -- a cream gel that cools, moisturizes and conditions.

For Father's Day, Avon has released R.P.M., a cologne featuring aquatic citrus, white cardamom and cool pepper. R.P.M. is available in a 2.5-ounce eau de cologne spray for $17.50.

Wal-Mart also has many beauty products ideal for Father's Day, including a Nautica Men's Gift Set for $18.63, featuring a blend of lemon, moss, amber and musk in a half-ounce eau de toilette spray, half-ounce aftershave and a 1-ounce deodorant.

For those with a bit more cash, Wal-Mart has an Eternity for Men by Calvin Klein Gift Set, featuring an aromatic, woody blend of lavender, jasmine, amber, sandalwood, vetiver and rosewood in a 3.4-ounce eau de toilette spray and 3.4-ounce aftershave. The set is $59.92.

There's also Wal-Mart's Remington microflex R846 Titanium Shaver for $38.76 featuring three floating heads and ultrathin blades. It comes with a cleaning brush and travel pouch.

Ruby Lola also has men's beauty products in addition to the Robert Graham shirts.

"We have a few Brave Soldier Items," Tidball said. "It's a men's skin care line that is so luxurious that we have a lot of women buying it for themselves. We also have a line called More. It's a fabulous spa treatment, made up of great creams and scrubs and oils."

Ruby Lola beauty products cost between $25 and $30. Tidball said men have become increasingly more appreciative of such gifts.

"I think it's becoming more socially acceptable for men to pamper themselves," she said.

"To give your dad a spa gift certificate is something that they're going to enjoy, and I think it's a nice way to unwind and just pamper yourself. It's not only the beauty benefits, but it's also psychologically, mentally just so relaxing and nice."

Illinois Tool Works Inc. on Tuesday raised its second-quarter and 2004 estimates on the strength in its North American and international markets. Based on its April and May results, the diversified manufacturer said it expects income from continuing operations of $1.14 to $1.18 a share for the second quarter. Spiegel Inc., the bankrupt Downers Grove retailer that pioneered mail-order marketing, won court approval Tuesday to sell its flagship catalog business to private equity firm Pangea Holdings Ltd. for $53.4 million. Pangea will pay $2 million in cash, honor an estimated $22 million in orders Spiegel made and take on $29.4 million of debt under the sale approved by U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Cornelius Blackshear in New York. Spiegel is selling its major assets, including its Eddie Bauer clothing chain, to pay creditors who are owed about $1.5 billion.

Ryerson Tull buying J&F

Chicago-based steelmaker Ryerson Tull Inc. said Tuesday it will buy J&F Steel from Arbed Americas, a subsidiary of Spain's Arcelor SA, for about $55 million in cash. Journal faces byline strike

Wall Street Journal reporters will withhold their bylines from articles in the Wednesday and Thursday editions of the newspaper as they protest terms of a proposed labor contract with publisher Dow Jones & Co. Dow Jones said it will support the decision of reporters who wish to have their bylines withheld, though the reporters don't have a contractual right to keep their names off their stories.

Sure, we know a tie is a typical Father's Day gift, but today's styles make the gift-giving anything but ordinary.

This Sunday, as you lavish your dad with gifts, brunch and good cheer, thank him for all his love and support with a fashionable new necktie.

Americans spend more than $1 billion a year on ties, and the tie remains the most popular Father's Day gift.

The good news is that you don't have to spend a fortune to find a cool design.

Gone are the monochromatic shirt and tie looks Regis Philbin popularized a few years back. Current trends include lots of color, skinnier versions with a retro feel and bold, bright patterns.

So, treat Dad this weekend, and be sure to tie one on!

MILAN -- Forget drive-through windows. Nautica has come up with dock shopping.

The American sportswear brand, a unit of VF Corp., caps off its spring retail rollout this week with the opening of a seventh Italian store in Porto Rotondo on the northern coast of Sardinia.

The whitewashed wood gazebo is perched on Porto Rotondo's wharf and is directly across from the resort's exclusive yacht club. "The space is like the Newport of Italy," said Patrizia Morini, general manager of Ridenco Italy, Nautica's licensee in Italy and Greece. "The captain of the [Porto Rotondo] yacht club was aware of our brand, appreciated our image and actually invited us to open shop there."

The 540-square-foot space is accessible by land or by water. All seven Nautica shops in Italy have been opened in the past month and a half. Other locations include the resort towns of Capri, Porto Cervo and Siracusa. Morini said the company invested an average of $ 600,000, or 500,000 euros converted at current exchange, for each store opening and said sales have been going well, with average purchases ranging between $ 180 and $ 420, or 150 to 350 euros.

"In cities such as Milan and Rome we're seeing our jackets perform well, while in the resort towns swimwear is the big seller," Morini said, adding that four more stores are slated to open by the end of this year.

A relatively unknown brand in Italy, Nautica last fall signed a deal with Ridenco, originally its Greek licensee, to aggressively enter the Italian market. Later this week Nautica will present its spring-summer 2005 collection at Pitti Immagine Uomo in Florence. "This is our third Pitti but our most important one," Morini said. "Last June we told the Italian market what we were planning and now we've delivered. "

Nautica's Italian approach is two-pronged, with store openings representing just one half of the company's strategy. Although another 10 stores are planned for next spring, including in or around ski resorts, Morini is also working to build Nautica's wholesale network. Currently 100 doors throughout Italy carry Nautica, a number that should grow to 150 by next summer when Nautica begins opening corners in department and specialty stores.

Oxford Industries' shares surged almost 21 percent Monday as the Atlanta apparel maker announced a purchase and said it expects higher profits. Shares rose $7.40 to $43.50.

The company, which makes licensed apparel, said it has agreed to buy Ben Sherman for about $146 million in cash.

The London-based privately held designer makes men's sportswear, accessories and footwear, including lines carried in department stores such as Rich's-Macy's in Atlanta.

Ben Sherman, founded in 1963, is owned by Enterprise Equity and 3i, a venture capital company.

"Ben Sherman is an excellent brand. We believe there are significant opportunities for growth both overseas and here in the U.S.," said J. Hicks Lanier, Oxford's chief executive.

Oxford Industries, whose 2003 sales were $765 million, has spent the last few years tweaking its offerings. It bought the Tommy Bahama brand and retail stores in 2003. Oxford also makes clothing under the brands Tommy Hilfiger, Nautica, Oscar de la Renta and Geoffrey Beene.

The "acquisition looks like a terrific strategic fit," said analyst Joseph Teklits of Wachovia Securities, in a report.

Oxford said the Ben Sherman deal will boost fiscal 2005 earnings as much as 25 cents. The acquisition is expected to close in July.

BODY:

DEMINT WINS RUNOFF: Rep. Jim DeMint won the runoff election Tuesday for the Republican nomination for the U.S. Senate seat from South Carolina, defeating former Gov. David Beasley. DeMint is a backer of President Bush's trade-expanding policies and has argued that they benefit the South Carolina economy. By contrast, U.S. textile executives largely hold that Bush's trade policies are responsible for an influx of cheap imports, primarily from China, and subsequent job losses. DeMint will face Democratic candidate Inez Tenenbaum, the state's education superintendent who sides with domestic textile mills on trade issues, in the Nov. 2 general election. The Senate seat is being vacated by Democrat Ernest Hollings, a stalwart in siding with the textile industry on trade issues.

OK ON OUTLETS: The Mills Corp. has received approval from the City of Sunrise in Florida to develop The Colonnade Outlets at Sawgrass, a $ 38 million, 110,000-square-foot addition to the Sawgrass Mills entertainment/shopping center. As reported, The Colonnade will be Mills' first enclave for high-end and designer outlets. It will be an open-air setting with Mediterranean architecture, fountains, restaurants and plazas. Construction on The Colonnade will begin this fall, after completing the permitting and documentation process, and is expected to be done by late 2005. Mills is also renovating other parts of the mall. The Colonnade increases Sawgrass Mills to 2.3 million leasable square feet.

MICHAEL ADDS EYES: Hot on the heels of its swimwear deal with Warnaco Swim, Michael Kors Inc. signed a licensing agreement with Marchon Eyewear Inc. for sunglasses and ophthalmic eyewear. Marchon has gained the worldwide rights to manufacture and distribute eyewear for the better-priced Michael Michael Kors collection. The Michael Kors Collection label is currently produced under license by Charmant Inc. The Michael eyewear collection will launch at the International Vision Expo 2004 in Las Vegas this September. Marchon manufactures and distributes licensed lines for labels such as Coach, Fendi, Calvin Klein, Nautica and Nike. Earlier this month, it lost the Donna Karan and DKNY licenses to the Italian Luxottica Group.

DISMISSED: The J. Jill Group Inc. on Wednesday said that a Boston federal court on Monday dismissed a purported class-action lawsuit alleging securities law violations against the firm and two of its executives. Gordon Cooke, president and chief executive officer, said in a statement, "The dismissal of the suit confirms our position that our disclosures were both proper and timely."

HEADLINE: LAP IT UP; 7 SWIMSUITS THAT STAND UP TO EXERCISE

BYLINE: By Lisa Nicita, The Arizona Republic

BODY:

Dear Ask Yes,

I plan to include swimming laps in my daily exercise program. Are there certain swimsuits I should be looking at?

ANSWER:

Leave your string bikini on the doorknob or you'll find it at the bottom of the pool after just a few laps. For the most part, it's best to stick to one-piece suits (cue images of old, embarrassing swim-team suits from childhood). It's not what you think. Suits for lap swimming have evolved to include color and some pretty cute patterns, such as polka dots and flowers. And, swimsuit designers make lap suits more durable than they used to, so you can say so long to a faded suit with a pillied seat.

"Whatever people are comfortable in is really going to work," says Annemarie Miskovic, an assistant swim coach at Arizona State University, adding that there now are training bikinis available that are specifically designed for lap swimmers.

But take note of size.

"A big swimsuit will drag extra in the water," she says. "Sizing is more important than style and material."

Lap suits have come a long way. Here is what we found, to keep you stylishly in the swim.

* A flowered Speedo, $66 at What Women Want Swimwear, with a mid-back strap and racer-back shoulder straps.

* A simple racer-back one-piece, $38 at GapBody, that's supported by a plastic ring on the back and accented with a chest stripe.

* A lime-trimmed La Blanca tank suit with a high back, $82 at Neiman Marcus.

* A pair of suits with chest support -- a blue and navy Nautica tank suit, $65.99 at Robinsons-May, with a clasp high on the back and a padded interior, and an adorable Calvin Klein polka-dot one-piece, $100 at Dillard's, that laces up high in the back and includes an underwire bra.

* An Ocean Pacific-inspired suit, $12.76 at Wal-Mart, that has crisscross straps in the back, a high front and a ribbed body.

* A Speedo "Lifeguard" suit, $60 at www.speedousa.com. Cue the Baywatch music.

DO: Look for a tight fit in the dressing room. The suit will stretch once you get in the water.

DO: Buy a more expensive suit. For a serious swimmer, it's worth the price.

DON'T: Wear your everyday bikini for laps. If you're worried about tan lines, invest in a training bikini.

DON'T: Forget a swim cap to protect your hair. Get the cap wet before putting it on to prevent pulling.

Usually it's the mother of the bride who cries at weddings, but this time it was the justice of the peace. On Feb. 27 West, mayor since 2003 of a village of 6,000, officiated at the marriages of 25 gay and lesbian couples, sometimes tearing up from "just seeing the love people had for each other," he says. Before that day, he admits, "I hadn't thought much about being married, but it made me feel I would like to find somebody I would want to see every day." But the state of New York gave him something else to think about when it charged him with the crime of marrying couples without licenses. (Charges were dismissed June 10.) He also faced a restraining order against performing more same-sex marriages, courtesy of a lawsuit brought by a group affiliated with the Reverend Jerry Falwell. ("A sign I'm doing something right," cracks West, a Green Party member.) Meanwhile, aspiring First Ladies of New Paltz entertaining visions of political grandeur should know that West pulls only $ 8,000 a year for his duties and still rooms with three buddies in a house with a skateboarding half-pipe in the backyard. Inside job

HE was immortalized in Robert Daly's book and movie "The Prince of the City," and now former NYPD detective Robert Leuci is sharing his secrets from his 20 years on the force in "All the Centurions." The book promises to shed light on one of the most tumultuous periods in the department's history from the inside. Leuci will be feted by many of his former cop colleagues, his daughter, ABC producer Santina Leuci, and Fire Commissioner Nicholas Scoppetta tonight at Langan's on West 47th Street.

Eastern front

ALL is well again between Jennifer Lopez and the Russians who have licensed the J.Lo line for their country - and all it took was cash flow. Even though the Latina lovely's visit to the Moscow store was "postponed," it hasn't hampered sales at all. In fact, the clothes are flying off the shelves. "They're blowing out of the product," J.Lo's Andy Hilfiger said. "The sales numbers are amazing and we got a letter saying they want to open three more stores."

Don't come back

BILL Gates had better stick to annoying people in America because the Italians don't want him back after his recent vacation. First, the Microsoft titan's helicopter was forbidden to land on Stromboli, a volcanic island in the Tyrrhenian Sea. Then he and his wife Melinda moved on to Sardinia, where the billionaire wanted to have a romantic dinner on the shore of Cala di Luna. The problem was that he wanted to bring tables, chairs and 300 torches from his 200-foot yacht, "Goyopus," which was anchored nearby. Angry residents put a stop to it by alerting the eco-police, who denied access. Reps for Gates declined to comment.

Firm dies with designer

THE widow of architect Dominick Segrete, who designed the new Bloomingdale's SoHo store, has pulled the plug on his venerable company less than a month after his death. Segrete, who was CEO of Tucci, Segrete & Rosen, died of cancer on May 18 at the age of 64. His widow, Pauline Segrete, gave all 22 employees the ax without notice, severance or even vacation pay on June 21, we're told. "Imagine what employees with 20 years or more and families felt like being thrown out with no advance warning," fumes one of the firm's former execs. "This is an unprecedented action, even in this industry. This is pure greed and feigned insolvency. The details of the dismissal are truly heartless. The chairman hasn't been dead a month and she first told us all how 'indebted' she was to us and 'needed' us to help her get through the loss of her husband. His grave isn't cold and she pulls the plug." But Pauline Segrete insists: "The company didn't have the money so I paid them out of my own pocket. I followed the law. They were not entitled to severance."

Just asking

WHICH head producer of a foreign TV network is having an affair with her top editor, directly violating company policy? Everyone knows what's going on because the lovers have their liaisons in the cutting room, leaving underwear and other clues . . . WHICH recently fired record label head just wiped away her sorrows - and forehead wrinkles - at a plastic surgeon's office? She now looks 15 years younger and way more relaxed . . . WHICH popular television host isn't so happily married? The charmer has carried on an affair with a young girl for several years - even during his wife's pregnancy - paying discreet visits after his work day is done.

Reagan fan

THE most surprising thing Bijou Phillips said the other night at the birthday dinner for nightlife impresario John Flanagan was how much she admired Ronald Reagan. Bijou, 24, explained to PAGE SIX that her late father, John Phillips of the Mamas and Papas, had reverted to the conservatism of his youth as he got older and had to pay what seemed like criminally high taxes. Also helping fun-loving Flanagan turn 39 were his sister Erin, Nicole Ritchie, Peter and Najma Beard, Casey Johnson, John Mosley and Angie Everheart.

Easy money

BEYONCÉ Knowles knows she's extravagantly overpaid. She's getting a reported $3 million from Tommy Hilfiger to be the spokeswoman for his new "True Star" perfume and appear in its ads. "It's the easiest job I've ever had," she told PAGE SIX's Lisa Marsh. She described her work regimen for the new fragrance commercial, in which she's shot in black and white rolling around and singing, as: "I spent the day lying on a couch."

Like father

BONANNO family consigliere Anthony Graziano is serving 11 years for racketeering, but it doesn't stop him from terrorizing his family from behind bars. According to Graziano's daughter, Lana Zancocchio, who talked to British journalist Clare Longrigg for "No Questions Asked: The Secret Life of Women in the Mob" (Miramax), Graziano regularly phones from jail and yells at everyone. And Lana follows orders and traditions, especially Omerta, the code of silence. She once stormed into a New Jersey golf club and punched one of her husband's mob pals because he was a "rat."

We hear . . .

THAT Andre Harrell won a custom scooter worth $14,000 at the Wayuu Taya Foundation Benefit hosted by Patricia Velasquez and Iman at the Hudson Library . . . THAT Stacey Bendet, who has made her alice+olivia line successful in just two years, is launching a men's cashmere line at Barneys this fall. The line is named anthony+mo after her two best guy friends . . . THAT Nautica has donated towels and hats to the lifeguards of the Town of Southampton for the summer . . . THAT comedy czarina Caroline Hirsch, NYC & Company's Jonathan Tisch and Alliance CEO Jarrod Moses are co-hosting a cocktail reception this Saturday at the oceanfront Hamptons home of Hirsch and Andrew Fox to kick off the First Annual New York Comedy Festival taking place this fall . . . THAT "Spider-Man 2," which opens Wednesday, got a big rave from both Roger Ebert and Variety, which predicts it will top the $800 million the original raked in.

Fallen soldier

RYAN Noel, the guitarist and bass player for buzzed-about electroclash band A.R.E. Weapons, has died of a heroin overdose. He was 29. Noel's body was found in the band's SoHo studio earlier this month, said bandmate Paul Sevigny. "The real tragedy is as far as anyone knew, he wasn't using," Sevigny said. "His life was going really well. He was really happy. It blindsided all of us." Noel was a semi-pro skateboarder who also played in the cult band Clikatat Ikatowi. Sevigny and bandmates Brain McPeck, Matt McAuley and Erik Rappin issued this statement: "Ryan is [bleeping] awesome." The band will pay tribute to their fallen comrade during their show at B.B. King's Blues Club on July 13.

MOVING ON; BELK LEAVING SOUTHGATE SHOPPING CENTER FOR LAKESIDE VILLAGE; PLANNING A BIGGER AND BETTER STORE The Ledger (Lakeland, FL) June 29, 2004, Tuesday

LAKELAND

After 35 years in business in Lakeland's Southgate Shopping Center, Belk will close its doors Aug. 31.

The decision comes after Belk announced in May that it will be part of Lakeside Village -- the shopping center off Harden Boulevard in Lakeland scheduled to open in November 2005.

"We think Lakeside Village is going to be outstanding, and it will still service the customers that our old location did," said Lars Petersen, chairman of Belk's southern division based in Jacksonville.

The 35 employees at the Southgate location will have the option of going to work at the Belk in Lakeland Square mall or the Lakeside Village location. A few will be transferred to the Winter Haven store at 700 3rd St. S.W.

The department store is leaving behind a 20,000-square-foot spot in Southgate, which might be taken over by an office supply store.

"That's not completely incorrect," said Scott Crossman, president of Crossman & Co. in Orlando, which handles leasing at the shopping center.

Until all papers are signed, Crossman said he wouldn't disclose any specific information about the new tenant.

Though Belk had already decided to leave the spot, Crossman said rent would have increased if Belk had signed another lease agreement.

"We would have greatly increased rent for them to stay," Crossman said. "The rent they paid was contemplated a long time ago, and we would have adjusted it to market price. That's what we'll do for the new tenant."

Crossman said although shoppers might be sad to see Belk leave, Southgate might thrive from the change.

"The new tenant will do much higher sales per square foot, and the viability of the shopping center will escalate," he said. "That affects everybody there."

Shoppers can expect the new tenant by the end of the year or early 2005, Crossman said.

Construction will be done at the vacated spot to make way for the new retailer, and Crossman & Co. is also considering updating the entire Southgate complex. Southgate, known for its sweeping arch and appearance in the 1990 movie "Edward Scissorhands," was built in 1957.

Meanwhile, Belk is planning a bigger and better store for Lakeside Village. The store will measure 75,000 square feet and will be a new prototype for Belk.

"There will be fewer walls and dividers, bright lighting and many new brands," Petersen said. "We'll carry Ralph Lauren, Nautica, Tommy Hilfiger. We'll be fully loaded with better brands, cosmetics and an extensive home section. It'll be at the level of a mall store, only more."

Though the Southgate location -- in a plaza, not an enclosed mall -- was unusual for Polk and much of Florida, Petersen said many Belks are located in open-air centers.

Belk's roots date to 1888, when William Henry Belk opened a small bargain store in Monroe, N.C.

In 1891, Belk's brother, John Belk, became a partner in the Monroe store. The company became Belk Brothers Co.

Today, Charlotte, N.C.-based Belk has about 230 stores in 13 states. The stores are privately owned and operated by the Belk families. Belk Inc. is the nation's largest privately owned department store organization.

AMERICANS CONTINUE TO SHOW THEIR PATRIOTISM BY GOING RED, WHITE AND BLUE ON THE FOURTH OF JULY.

BYLINE: ALLISON KAPLAN Pioneer Press

BODY:

Eighteen million Americans will travel over the Fourth of July weekend. Twenty million will attend a parade. And 49 million will go shopping.

Even though consumers own more flags and patriotic apparel than they did a year ago, they're still buying, according to a new survey from the National Retail Federation.

"Fourth of July sales have been very brisk -- much busier than last year," says Scott Burns, manager of Party City in West St. Paul. He attributes the strong interest, in part, to the holiday falling on a weekend when more people have time for parties. Small flags, patriotic paper plates, garlands and decorations are all hot sellers.

Next to Christmas, the Fourth of July is the most important outdoor decorating holiday, according to another recent survey from Unity Marketing, a firm specializing in consumer information for luxury marketers. Unity president Pam Danziger estimates 40 percent of American households will show their patriotic spirit over the weekend.

"More and more people are taking time out of their busy schedules to hang flags and banners, string lights and make centerpieces to create the mood for a party," Danziger says. "Decorating our homes for a holiday gives us an emotional boost."

Whether you're looking for a basic flag, a red-white-and-blue wind chime or a silky stars-and-stripes scarf, there's no shortage of ways to flaunt your patriotism. Here are some highlights.

Allison Kaplan can be reached at akaplan@pioneerpress.com or 651-228-5116.

GRAPHIC: 8 photos

1. The flag looks fab as a washable silk scarf you can drape around your neck or wear as a belt, $32 from Echo at Marshall Field's.
2. This Esprit striped tube top might not be the best option for playing volleyball, but it's definitely chic, $39 at Marshall Field's.

3. Perfect for a patriotic pool party: Tommy Hilfiger red, white and blue swim trunks, $35 at Marshall Field's.
4. Fourth of July has become big for decorating. Just drape some flag garland, $6 at Party City, and put your drinks on ice in a stars-and-stripes party bucket, $3.39 at Target.
5. Lemonade is much more festive in a star glass from Pottery Barn, $19 for a set of four. But it's the sparkler straw that gives it pizzazz, $4 for a dozen at Pottery Barn.
6. Accessories are a great way to make a classy statement, like this leather bracelet from Ralph Lauren, available in red or blue, $32 at Marshall Field's.
7. Show your true colors in an American flag T-shirt, like this graphic print design from Tommy Hilfiger, $26 at Marshall Field's.
8. Dress the part in Nautica striped tankini top, $46, and blue boy short, $38, at Marshall Field's.

CASUAL MALE'S HEAVYWEIGHT HOPES CLOTHING CHAIN SEEKS REVIVAL WITH ONE-TWO PUNCH The

CLOTHING CHAIN SEEKS REVIVAL WITH ONE-TWO PUNCH

BYLINE: By Naomi Aoki, Globe Staff

BODY:

For years at Casual Male Big & Tall stores, there was scant evidence of the retailer's slogan: Think Big.

With nearly 500 stores, the chain was easily the nation's leading retailer for men it gently refers to as "big guys." But unlike other top retailers, Casual Male didn't advertise, its store layout (shirts on one rack, pants on another) was less than imaginative, and its sales were steadily slipping.

These days, however, the chain is under new management, and hopes are running high. Though the Canton company that operates Casual Male stores remains unprofitable, losing $12 million last year primarily because of charges related to closing other stores, the company is narrowing its losses, and sales at Casual Male stores open more than a year are rising.

One big (and tall) reason: George Foreman. A superstar among celebrity endorsers, the former heavyweight boxing champ signed on a year ago to pitch the chain and introduce his namesake clothing lines. While Foreman is the public face of Casual Male's overhaul, he's only half of the management's one-two punch to turn around the chain.

Behind the scenes, Casual Male has struck deals with Polo Ralph Lauren, Nautica, and Calvin Klein, and is pouring $18 million into freshening up stores with new paint, fixtures, and layouts. The company also increased its marketing budget to nearly $26 million this year from $20 million last year. And in coming weeks, it will replace an antiquated inventory management system with a state-of-the-art setup that executives project will save the chain $5 million a year.

"At this point, the management would have to make a heroic effort not to succeed," said Gary M. Giblen, director of research at CL King & Associates. "There's a burgeoning market for big and tall. There's no concerted competition in this space, and they have good initiatives in place."

Two years ago, when the company's new management bought Casual Male for $170 million out of bankruptcy, it was a dinosaur in the retail world. Its inventory systems were outdated. Stores were rundown. Its racks were stocked with unknown labels such as Harbor Bay. It was losing customers.

But on paper, the retailer seemed to have a surefire opportunity to dominate a fragmented industry of mostly mom-and-pop rivals. Big and tall men roughly 10 percent of the population are classified as being over 6 feet 4 inches tall, or having waist sizes of 42 inches or more. Among its biggest competitors is Rochester Big and Tall, with more than 20 stores in 12 states, compared to Casual Male's 485 stores in 44 states.

Though competition from retailers like Wal-Mart, Men's Wearhouse, and JC Penney was growing, their selection of big-and-tall clothing remained limited. With roughly $320 million in annual sales in a nearly $6 billion industry, the new management reasoned there was room to grow.

"Just because you're the only one doesn't mean that you're good at what you do," said David A. Levin, Casual Male Retail Group Inc.'s chief executive. "Our challenge is to get people back in the store."

At the time of the acquisition in May 2002, the retail group was known as Designs Inc. and it sold Levi's and Dockers clothing in about 100 outlet-mall stores. It also operated stores selling hip-hop brand Ecko. Within months of buying the Casual Male chain from shoe company J. Baker Inc., however, the new management decided to exit its other businesses to focus on the big-and-tall market. It changed its name, and crafted a three-year turnaround plan.

Key to that plan was a marketing push to overhaul the brand's image. The company asked customers to pick the ideal pitchman from a list of 10 big-and-tall celebrities, and the result was overwhelmingly in favor of Foreman.

The boxer's smiling face graces the cover of most of Casual Male's catalogs. Stores are decorated with standing cutouts of Foreman and banners with the exhortation, "Get Into Your Comfort Zone." Late night hosts Jay Leno and David Letterman have both poked fun at the partnership.

Sales of the chain's waist-relaxer pant, which stretches in the waist by as much as 4 inches, increased 50 percent after adopting the George Foreman brand name. Sales of its polo shirt increased threefold when it became part of the George Foreman collection. This spring, sales of the George Foreman line accounted for 15 percent of the business.

Sales at stores open at least a year a key measure of a retailer's health rose in the last quarter of the 2003 fiscal year and again in the first quarter of this year. Still, it's too early to tell whether the turnaround strategy is a winner. Under new management, sales at Casual Male stores fell to $319 million last year from $329 million in 2002 and $332 million in 2001.

Foreman's appeal is wasted on Dave Hingsburger, a longtime Casual Male customer. But the changes in the store aren't for naught. Hingsburger said the additional color, broader selection, and better presentation make the stores "more boutiquey." As for mainstream retailers offering more big-and-tall clothing, the 51-year-old size 6X who travels from Canada to shop Casual Male is less than impressed.

"This is dressing," he said, pointing to a selection of cotton and knit shirts at a Casual Male store in Dedham last week. "That's upholstery."

Whether you need a fancy serving dish, a few extra dinner plates for houseguests or even a new set of flatware, some Valley stores offer a great selection of kitchen gear at a fraction of what you'd pay in department stores or even discount chains. Here's the scoop on a few and a peek at what we found on recent visits.

Mega Marshalls/HomeGoods

Sure, there are Marshalls stores all over the Valley, but in most of them, kitchen stuff is relegated to a few overcrowded aisles at the back of the store. Only the Mega Marshalls at Desert Ridge devotes more than half the store to housewares. You'll find aisle after aisle of high-end cookware, dinnerware and serving pieces from brands such as Cuisinart, Calphalon and Nautica, all at 20 to 60 percent off department or specialty-store prices. Don't skip the clearance racks, either. On a recent trip, we found a $100 Chantal teakettle marked down from $50 to $36.

DETAILS: Desert Ridge Marketplace, Loop 101 and Tatum Boulevard, Phoenix, (480) 473-2127.

Big Lots

If you're setting up your first kitchen, you can't do better than Big Lots. Small appliances such as toasters and coffeemakers cost less than $20, dinnerware sets for four start at $11.99, and baking pans are $3.99. Styles are similar to what you'd find at the mall.

DETAILS: 20 or so Valley stores, 10 with furniture departments. Visit www.biglots.com for locations.

Greenbacks/Dollar Tree

Having a dinner party? Check out Greenbacks (recently bought by Dollar Tree) for inexpensive place settings. We found stylish plates, bowls, glassware, fabric place mats and lots of plastic resealable containers. There's a wall of kitchen gadgets and linens, and a great selection of plastic dinnerware for the patio or pool area. And absolutely everything is $1 or less.

DETAILS: Visit www.dollartree.com to find dozens of Valley locations.

GRAPHIC: 1) The modern circle pattern and retro colors on this 50-cent drinking glass (left) from Dollar Tree remind us of this similar acrylic tumbler for $2.95 at Crate & Barrel. 2) A 20-piece stainless steel flatware set (left) with display caddy, $9.99 at Big Lots, is similar to a $44.95 set from Sur la Table, right down to the decorative embellishment on the handle.

VF Corp., the world's largest jeansmaker, on Wednesday dismissed speculation that it's bidding for the Dockers casual-pants brand that rival Levi Strauss & Co. of San Francisco is trying to sell.

"That probably wouldn't be one at the top of our list," though VF has "looked at" the Dockers brand, VF Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Mackey McDonald said on an earnings call in response to questions about whether Dockers fits the firm's acquisition plans.

VF of Greensboro, N.C., had been considered a leading contender for Dockers since May, when Levi's announced its sale intentions.

Shedding Dockers, which is widely valued between about $500 million and $1 billion, could help Levi's pay down a portion of its $1.96 billion in debt. The company hopes to focus on expanding its discount-store Levi Strauss Signature brand and struggling Levi's jeans.

VF's broad portfolio includes such brands as Lee, Wrangler, Vanity Fair and JanSport. The $5.2 billion-a-year company recently has added North Face, Vans and Nautica.

On a call awaited by Wall Street analysts and bond traders who follow Levi's, McDonald said Wednesday morning that VF is taking a "focused, disciplined" approach to further acquisitions. He stressed that VF wants lifestyle brands -- a term for image-driven labels that cut across numerous categories such as apparel, home furnishings and sporting goods. The Dockers label appears on sheet sets and luggage but is best known as the leader in men's casual pants.

Levi's bonds declined slightly Wednesday, sources said. The bonds in recent months have been on a steady climb in part because of optimism about the Dockers sale.

"I think that the VF news kind of spooked people a little bit," though confidence remained that the Dockers sale is progressing, said Alexis Gold, a CIBC World Markets analyst who tracks Levi's. She does not own Levi's bonds, and her firm does not have a banking relationship with the company.

Wall Street sources said that with VF out of the picture, companies considered the best candidates to buy Dockers include the Jones Apparel Group Inc. of Bristol, Pa., and Hong Kong apparel sourcing giant Li & Fung. Jones has said that it is considering several acquisitions, but a spokeswoman declined further comment Wednesday. Li & Fung's U.S. office did not return a call seeking comment. HAVE you noticed how the numerals on watches have gone from small to really huge? You generally have either small numbers on the face or big, bold ones which double up as a fashion statement.

Now, Nautica, the label known for its sportswear, has, via its timepieces division, come up with numerals that tick on the middle path. The numbers are just the right size. But the circular face is a oversized, in keeping with the contemporary look.

The BFC 46 straps are available in a wide range of colours including navy and black, while the timepiece faces come in golden hue, ebony black or silvery tones.

The watches are priced at RM429 each.

SEEING how sharks swim so smoothly, Speedo, with the help of the London Natural History Museum, conducted a study which included examining the skin texture of the fish and its movements through water.

It was discovered that the shape and feel of the shark's denticles varies across its body to manage the flow of water.

After more than four years of advanced testing and analysis, Speedo has come up with the Fastskin FsII which was recently launched in Athens.

So, if you want to swim like the Man from Atlantis, you know what to do!

HIGH POINT, N.C. -- Licensing -- it's not all beer and skittles.

More, it takes a lot of work, trust and communication to make the results pay out the way the licensor and the myriad licensees feel the program should work.

And each side of the licensing scenario has different approaches and expectations, ranging from product to distribution challenges.

But for the more successful of the programs, a straightforward contract, close communication, and understanding the goals at the front-end are key elements to success.

These were the conclusions identified by a roundtable panel during Showtime, sponsored by the International Textile Market Association.

Panel members for "Licensing: Brand Building or Gimmick?" were Megan Gunn, senior licensing manager for Waverly; Andy Pacuk, senior vice president, The Robert Allen Group; Scott Ballard, vice president, sales, Lexington Home Brands; Rob Casey, vice president, Ralph Lauren Home at Henredon; and Joie Wilson of Marketplace, a licensing agency. Carole Sloan, founding editor-in-chief of Home Textiles Today, was the moderator.

One key element, the licensees agreed, was that the brand or license knew better than they what the image should be.

Said Ballard, "It would be foolish to think we can do Nautica better than David Chu. But there has to be a lot of give and take, and occasionally there will be lines drawn in the sand."

From a licensor's perspective, Gunn said that Waverly, with some 50 licensees, "looks at each relationship as different and unique. We are partnering with a specialist in that particular business." And for Waverly, those businesses run the gamut from home textiles and furniture to paints and publishing.

And in terms of the distribution challenges, Gunn observed that Target, the licensee in the discount department store segment, works from the company's archives, while new product is distributed among other channels.

Brand message is key to licensing success, said Wilson who represents the "Antiques Road Show" TV program. With an audience of that dimension, she noted, there is immediate identification with the product.

But as the distribution challenge becomes more acute, licensors are challenged in terms of with whom and how they ally themselves. Discussing the Ralph Lauren Home perspective, Casey noted, "They have different silos, and it is a collaborative effort in resolving these issues."

For Lexington, "We have a multi-tier approach, and we are pushing our independent retailer base upwards. We're opening distribution by points of view by license." Lexington's licensees include Bob Timberlake, Tommy Bahama, Nautica, Waverly, and Liz Claiborne.

Distribution and product design also are interrelated, said Casey. At Ralph Lauren Home, which is known for its minute oversight of all product, "We're more push than pull. If we get them focused on royalty revenue potential within reason, it becomes less dogmatic."

And as the Ralph Lauren Home concept evolves, "There is dedicated distribution for the Polo stores and the department stores." And in the furniture world, there also are the specific high-end furniture stores, he said.

Entourage tracks a group of buddies making their way through Hollywood after one of them--Vince, played by Grenier--makes it. At right, Grenier reaches for his smokes in a suit ($ 1,050) and op-art shirt ($ 165) by just cavalli and a belt by torino belts ($ 79). His shoes--with double-buckle monk straps--are by kenneth cole ($ 175). Weston ($ 980). His belt is by johnston & Murphy ($ 55).

Agents will talk about buzz and box office, but there's only one sure sign you've made it in Hollywood: getting invited to a party at the Playboy Mansion. FROM LEFT: Piven wears a suit ($ 495), shirt ($ 75) and tie ($ 68), all by john bartlett. His brown leather belt, by torino belts ($ 79), has a nickel-plated brass buckle. Our beautiful lingerette is in a sheer slip ($ 210), bra ($ 149) and matching thong ($ 90), all by la perla black label. Her boots are by stuart weitzman ($ 400). Connolly is in a suit by ted baker endurance ($ 595), a shirt by ted baker london ($ 145) and loafers by nautica footwear ($ 100).

His newsboy cap is by country gentleman ($ 33), and his shoes are by diesel footwear ($ 130); his stainless watch is by seiko ($ 395). Dillon, who fills the role of Vince's would-be-actor brother, is wearing a sports coat ($ 495) and velvet turtleneck ($ 150) by arnold brant. His pants are by marc ecko collection ($ 150). Bunzilla's slip ($ 210) and thong ($ 90) are by la perla black label, and her rock-steady stilettos are by zang toi ($ 600).

Chin up, chest out: Grenier experiences the joys of a well-made couch, Playboy Mansion-style. He's in a stretch cotton suit by studio chereskin ($ 750) and a silk shirt by versace ($ 1,165). FROM LEFT: Grenier lends his buddy a hand in a suit by lubiam ($ 995) and a striped shirt by j. crew ($ 65). Complex adding new stores, targeting the local shopper The York Dispatch (York, PA) August 2, 2004 Monday

HEADLINE: Complex adding new stores, targeting the local shopper

BYLINE: By ELLEN LYON The [Harrisburg] Patriot-News

DATELINE: HERSHEY

BODY:

In its 10th anniversary year, The Outlets at Hershey is undergoing a rebirth of sorts with some new tenants and a new marketing strategy.

"We've been kind of the quiet secret in the market. More and more people are finding us, and as they do the better retailers are finding us," said David Ober, vice president of leasing at LMS Commercial Real Estate, owner of Property Management Alternatives Inc., which manages the outlet center.

Ober also is a general partner in PA Outlet Center LP, a partnership that controls the larger Rockvale Square Outlets near Lancaster. He plans to cross-market the Rockvale operation with the Hershey center.

New stores: Two years ago, the 245,000-square-foot Hershey outlets, owned by FSH Associates LP, had about 50 stores and an 82 percent occupancy rate, Ober said. This summer, he said, the center is up to 58 stores and 96 percent occupancy.

The tenant mix also has improved with some high-end additions, such as Tommy Hilfiger, which opened last month. The center already had outlet stores for designers Liz Claiborne, Nautica, Jones New York and Jones New York Country.

The advantage of an outlet store is that while Liz Claiborne fans might find a few racks of the designer's clothing in a department store, they will find 10,000 square feet of merchandise at the outlet center, he said.

Other new tenants this summer include Aerosoles and a Bible Factory Outlet. Brooks Brothers and Strasburg Children's are negotiating to open stores in the center, Ober said.

Some existing tenants have moved to larger quarters within the center. Dress Barn is relocating from an 8,100-square-foot store to 9,500 square feet, he said.

Targeting shoppers: The center's average shopper is a married woman with children and a household income of $63,000 a year, Ober said. The second-largest demographic group is over age 55 with grandchildren.

To better serve those customers, the center added a playground for children 18 months ago.

The center is pursuing a new marketing strategy that targets local older residents who make up 70 percent of the center's approximately 3.8 million shoppers each year.

Ober noted that within a five-mile radius of the center, the average annual household income is $71,000, with one out of every five households making $100,000.

Nearly 80 percent of the center's marketing budget now goes to local advertising, much of it on television, radio and billboards, Ober said.

Two years ago, the reverse was true, with 80 percent of the budget targeted at the 30 percent of the center's shoppers who are tourists, he said.

The center is not abandoning the tourist market, though.

People who attend the dolphin show at Hersheypark get a coupon for use at the outlet center, and the center works with Hershey Lodge and Convention Center and The Hotel Hershey, Ober said.

About 700 tour buses visit the Hershey outlets each year, a number Ober said he would like to double.

The outlet industry continues to thrive after a booming decade in the 1990s, when estimated total sales reached $14.3 billion in 1999, according to the outlet trade journal Value Retail News.

"It was everybody coming into the business. It was sort of the new kid on the block," said Linda Humphers, editor in chief of Value Retail News.

In 1995, the number of outlet centers nationwide reached a peak of 543, with 11,137 stores, according to the trade journal.

Since then, the number of outlet centers has dropped to 383 because of manufacturer consolidations and competition, but the number of outlet stores has steadily increased to about 14,000, Humphers said.

Only a few outlet centers open each year now, mostly near metropolitan areas, compared to about 15 a year in the 1990s, noted Randy Marks, publisher of "Outletbound -- A Guide to the Nation's Best Outlets." Some existing centers are being enlarged.

Outlet centers have evolved to offer better customer service and greater selection, rather than just the leftovers, seconds and irregulars with which they were associated in the past, he said.

They also have improved in appearance, in some cases resembling traditional shopping malls.

The biggest trend is toward high-end, luxury-brand outlet stores that give designers such as Versace and Chanel access to more customers, Marks said.

"What's great about the outlets is there are a lot of people that would be afraid to go into a Chanel store ... but when you go into an outlet you're less intimidated," he said.

To stay competitive, outlet centers will need to continue reinventing themselves through remodeling, promotions and expanded offerings, said Ellen Tolley, a spokeswoman with the National Retail Federation in Washington, D.C.

For consumers today, convenience and selection may be more important than price, although some people consider bargain shopping a sport, Tolley said.

The industry has taken note of the changes in Hershey, including its cross-marketing with Rockvale, which is ranked one of the top 25 outlet centers for performance by the Outlet Retail Merchants' Association.

"I think the owners are doing a really interesting job of linking the two [outlet centers]," Humphers said. "These owners are willing to spend the money to turn [Hershey] into a place where people want to shop. ... That's exactly what it takes."

Editor's note: Atlantic City is celebrating its 150th anniversary this year. In recognition, the Courier-Post is examining the city through the lens of one of its most recognizable symbols: Monopoly. Next week, we'll visit Marvin Gardens and Ventnor Avenue.

By JASON NARK

Courier-Post Staff ATLANTIC CITY

Tourists and gamblers these days often pass Atlantic Avenue on their way to the more glamorous and scenic trappings of the boardwalk and casinos.

While the arrival of the casinos in the late '70s gave the city an economic heart transplant, it also created a paradox for Atlantic Avenue and other streets.

Like the ocean it's named after, the street's prosperity as the city's main business district depends on the ebb and flow of casino-, convention- and beach-goers.

Yet, noted Robert E. Ruffolo, owner of Princeton Antiques and Books, "There's very few of the Atlantic Avenue businesses that receive the tourist dollar. Still, if all the casinos closed tomorrow, there wouldn't be another business left on Atlantic Avenue."

On a typical weekday, the street is filled primarily with locals as they shop for clothes, get a haircut or grab lunch. Intermingled with the dozens of small businesses are firehouses, churches and a bus terminal -- many of the things that make up life in any city.

"This is called "The Avenue," said T. Tuff Jackson, a 31-year city resident, as he visited the Bike World store. "This is where people around do all their business."

Atlantic is one of six streets in the city named after the world's oceans and seas by Dr. Jonathan Pitney, the physician dubbed the father of Atlantic City.

About 75 years later, the street became the first yellow property on the Parker Brothers' Atlantic City-theme board game, Monopoly.

From the city's inception as a seaside destination, Atlantic Avenue coupled with the boardwalk to offer amenities to the throngs of tourists and convention-goers.

The first commercial hotel, the Beloe House, was built in 1853 at the corner of Massachusetts and Atlantic avenues. It closed in 1902. The United States Hotel took up a full city block between Atlantic, Pacific, Delaware and Maryland avenues, now the current site of the Showboat Casino parking lot.

These large, grand hotels were impressive in size and featured modern amenities.

"The street was busy then, and it's busy now," said Lloyd Crump, 76, a city resident for more than 50 years. "It was always the business district."

At Bike World, a busy bicycle store that's moved around on Atlantic Avenue, Jackson said tourists could experience a different side of Atlantic City and save a few dollars, if they only patronized Atlantic Avenue.

"We know everything we can get on the boardwalk, we can get down here for $5 or $10 cheaper," he said. "I haven't been to the casinos in years."

The Walk, a high-end shopping district that spans the length of Michigan Avenue, was built to connect tourists from the boardwalk and casinos to the new convention center on Miss America Way.

At the intersection of Atlantic and Michigan, The Walk, with its trendy stores, such as Nautica and Tommy Hilfiger, stands out among the pizza restaurants, discount clothing stores and video shops.

Ruffolo lauds the influx of new businesses in the city but is doubtful they will have a lasting impact on Atlantic Avenue itself.

"I'm right across the street from a 2,000-room hotel, and there's days when I won't see a customer. Those gamblers come here to gamble, and when they're done, they are either exhausted or broke and they leave."

Ruffolo's store, which has been in operation since 1972, is a bountiful cornucopia of books and antiques. He said his store has prospered through mail-order and Internet sales, rather than foot traffic.

Our Lady Star of the Sea, a quaint, cedar-shingled, Roman Catholic church on the corner of Atlantic and California avenues, has been a fixture since 1897.

Although Spanish and Vietnamese Masses have been added, church volunteer Barney Marion said the congregation has changed little in the last decade.

"The city is completely different though. It's changed a lot since the casinos came in. It's changed a lot since the Monopoly game came out, too," said Marion, 79.

The congregation also maintains the city's last Catholic elementary school, Marion said.

Dock's Oyster House also dates to 1897, and with wall-to-wall mahogany is nearly as beautiful as the church.

Harry Dougherty, the original owner, was in real estate but "fell into the oyster business," said current owner and great-great-grandson Frank Dougherty.

Dougherty said the family has weathered hard times in the pre-casino years, but a reputation for good food can keep any business open, he said.

"It didn't happen overnight, but things are great here in my opinion," said Dougherty, 39, who lives in Margate.

In the last century, Dock's has served up millions of oysters, shelling out 75,000 alone last year. On a recent night, one lucky patron was going to dine on a massive 7 1/2-pound lobster with a claw the size of a catcher's mitt, which Dougherty said was caught up the coast near Long Beach Island.

While the high-end tailors, jewelers and movie theaters are more a thing of the past, city patrolman Mike Gavin said Atlantic Avenue is always evolving.

With the addition of The Walk and The Borgata nearby, the street could once again live up to its reputation as one of the pricier properties on the Monopoly board.

"This street runs the length of the city, and there's always something going on," said Gavin, a 14-year veteran of the force. "I'm still waiting to see if I can pass Go and collect $200, though."

Worth-the-trip rating:

Stores are rated on a scale of one to four cars, with one car meaning a store is worth a short trip, and the top rating, four cars, meaning a store is worth going the distance.

Looking for a cool back-to-school outfit, but not in a position to spend $75 on a top and $150 on jeans?

Then you might want to check out Plato's Closet, a franchise now 115 stores strong that is gaining popularity with bargain-savvy teens across the country.

The Paramus location - owned by Steven Schechter and open since last September - is basically an upscale Salvation Army, with gently used brand-name clothing at ridiculously low prices.

Brands we spotted during our recent visit included Abercrombie & Fitch, Banana Republic, Bebe, Dr. Martens, Diesel, DKNY, Ecko, Express, Gap, Guess, Hollister, J. Crew, Limited, Lucky Brand, Nautica, Old Navy, Polo, Rampage, Sean John, Skechers, Steve Madden, and Tommy Hilfiger.

Clothing is organized sensibly on racks - tank tops are all together, as are capris, and the jeans rack goes on for days (with the occasional appearance of Sevens and Paper Denims). Girls' items take up about three-quarters of the store, while boys' clothing is way in the back.

"The target audience is boys and girls ages 14-25, [but] it is really hard to get guys' stuff that is in good condition," Schecter says.

Inventory, which ranges from winter coats to summer shorts and changes daily, also includes bags, CDs, jewelry, hair accessories, picture frames, and lava lamps.

This being a resale boutique, you can also get rid of some of your own old threads from last school year. Here's how it's done:

"We first check for certain brands," Schecter says. "Then we check the condition of the clothing, whether it is a current style, and how old the item is. If it passes, we enter it into the computer.

"A price is then generated according to brand name [and] condition. ... Overall, everything is sold at about 70 percent off the original price. Then we pay between 30 to 40 percent of our selling price on the spot."

Amounts up to $25 will be paid in cash; for anything above that, Plato's Closet will cut you a check. If you want store credit instead of green, the value of your trade-in increases by 25 percent.

So whether you're trying to raise $10 so you can go see a movie Friday night or just looking for a $10 pair of jeans, drop by the next time you're in the area. Who knows what treasures you'll find?

BODY:

A Burlingame investment group announced Wednesday that it has sold its Ocean Pacific Apparel Corp. to Speedo swimsuits and Calvin Klein jeans maker Warnaco Group for $40 million.

The seller, Doyle & Boissiere, is a $100 million private equity fund that invests in and grows small businesses.

Warnaco, which will assume $1 million in closely held Ocean Pacific's debt, expects to complete the transaction this quarter. The move is expected to bolster sales of beachwear. Ocean Pacific will continue to operate from its Irvine headquarters as a unit of Warnaco.

"This acquisition will allow [Ocean Pacific] to grow with more resources behind it," said Bill Doyle, managing member of the Burlingame-based Doyle & Boissiere fund.

Doyle & Boissiere purchased the company in 1998, overseeing its growth. The group did not disclose what it paid for Ocean Pacific in 1998.

Ocean Pacific is known for its clothing and accessory brands including Op, Ocean Pacific and Seven 2 that cater to surfers and beach-goers. The company licenses its brands on sportswear, swimwear, footwear, sunglasses and other products.

Doyle & Boissiere Fund, which also owns Cojo Worldwide, a window covering and bedcover firm that sells to hotel chains, invests in promising companies with revenue in the $30 million to $100 million range.

The purchase will add to Warnaco's swimwear group, the only unit that posted an increase in sales in the company's first quarter. Warnaco, which emerged from Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection last year, is expanding its product lines with newly licensed Nautica swimsuits and Speedo Fastskin suits, which will be introduced at the Olympic Games in Athens this month.

Shares of New York-based Warnaco fell 25 cents to $18.06 at the close of Nasdaq Stock Market composite trading. Shares have risen 13 percent this year.

Sales from Warnaco's swimwear group rose 4.7 percent in the quarter ended April 3, to $155.3 million. Sales from the company's intimate apparel and sportswear groups fell, dragging down total sales in the quarter by 7.1 percent to $393.3 million.

BODY:

IN the midst of figuring out how to get to your classes, praying that you'll like your roommate and hoping that the cafeteria food is edible, isn't it nice to know that you can find a matching lamp for that comforter?

That's how retailers hope you will feel when you embark on your journey to dorm-room decor.

"Freshmen and their parents are just overwhelmed with things," said Anne Evans, a spokeswoman for Linens 'n Things. "The idea is to pull all the categories together into one palette and make it easy to mix and match."

Two years ago Linens 'n Things launched the Attitudes collection of complementary bedding and accessories. This year's palette is sherbet orange, midnight blue, sky blue and raspberry, and easy enough for even a design writer to use to create our photographs.

Ikea also offers twin bedding in style groups with colors that are repeated in accessories and bath items.

For girls, the vibrant Zoe minibed set with embroidered flowers at Linens 'n Things can be paired with accessories ranging from clothes hampers to dust bins. Favorite colors for girls across the board are hot pink and orange.

For guys, the look tends toward the Nautica label's navy, green and black, available at stores including Linens 'n Things and Bed Bath & Beyond.

"Boys gravitate to denim and darker colors," Evans said. "As a mother with a son who will be going to college next year, I'll be steering him more to that direction because boys tend to not be very clean and neat."

Experts say that parents and students should tour the dorm and take note of bed and room dimensions. Although our photograph features a bed placed on the floor, we found that most of the beds in that dorm, Will Rice College at Rice University, were bunk-style over desks.

That means when people come to visit, you might have to consider alternate seating.

"Storage ottomans, stools and those low rocking chairs are becoming popular for entertaining friends," Evans said.

Large floor pillows, which we found in red and blue at Ikea, would also fit the bill for instant seating.

Area rugs can attract attention away from the Institutional flooring found in most dorm rooms, or can help protect vintage wood floors such as the ones just restored in Will Rice College.

Other essentials are trash cans and desk sets, popular in metal mesh this year; and lighting, from desk lamps to the six-headed floor models that are so hot.

The choice of bath items will depend in part on whether the bathroom is private or shared. Baskets with matching soap dish and toothbrush holder can make the trip down the hall. For more private bathrooms, there are storage shelves skinny enough to fit next to the sink and vertical shower poles with baskets from the Container Store. Some experts recommend buying bright-colored towels that can be easily identified from others'.

To keep the room in shape during your stay, manufacturers such as Dap offer reusable adhesive, spackling, wood-finish repair kit and caulk as ways to hang art and repair the holes and scratches that almost inevitably will occur during that amazing first year.

BODY:

The leading men's wear brands and designers offer established looks for fall. According to the National Association of Men's Sportswear Buyers, Inc., established names are reaching into the archives for the classic elements like beefy woolens, opulent shearlings, bulky knits, striped suits, double-breasted outerwear, basic denim and plenty of brown. For the innovations that are compatible with the past and this season's trends, these elements form a solid foundation.

Tailored woolen suits take a little of the spotlight from hard-finished worsteds. In outerwear, mixed colors and tweed effects are seen. Dressier shearlings include long coats that are worn over tailored clothes. Shorter coats and jackets take a, step back from the rugged, country tradition.

Bulky knits show up in big-rib constructions, with the emphasis on texture as opposed to trim and decoration. Rib knits are also prominent as trim for collars, waistbands, cuffs and whole sleeves, on leather and fabric outerwear. Donna Karan's Collection translates the classic fall vocabulary into clothes that are durable, wearable and young.

Striped suits appear in many collections. The idea is more of a revival than an update. On the runways, they are freshened up with traditional shirts and neckwear. A matching striped tie in the Nautica show was hot. Nautica stressed clothes in timeless fabrics and colors. However, the look plays mainly into the resurgence of suits. Born of utility, some double-breasted construction provides an extra layer of chest protection, mainly for looks this season. Think about a double-breasted shearling jacket that is wide open at the neck and barely covers the waist. Kenneth Cole showed a nice example in his show. This designer's understated design approach calls attention to the deep, rich fabrics he uses in his collection.

In denim, designers are still using a bleaching treatment to create a worn look. You will find this on jeans and other garments that stay close to the traditions of work and farm: brown is the best color, especially in leather, wool, shearling.

Back-to-school shopping means the fun of browsing for new clothes. Though the basics remain the same from year to year - jeans and sweaters, T-shirts and skirts - there are always new and interesting twists to be found.

Here's a look at what's new. Happy shopping!

SHE'LL LEARN the ABCs of fashion in the season's most popular accessory: the poncho. It's a great look for girls of every age, and you'll find it everywhere in a variety of fabric and style options. Desha Palmer, 5, will head to kindergarten in Fairborn in this multicolored knit poncho ($19.50), with matching long-sleeved cotton floral T-shirt (not pictured, $12.50), lapis corduroy skirt ($9.50), striped tights ($6.50), corduroy clogs ($19.50) and lapis head wrap. ($3.50). All from The Children's Place.

STEPHANIE CALL, 17, is right on target with her Chanel-styled tweed jacket and feather lapel pin by Hot Kiss ($48). Here it's paired with a layered cutout T-shirt from Eyeshadow ($28), denim miniskirt from DKNY Jeans ($49) and faux crocodile heels from BCBGirls ($79). Beaded bracelet and chandelier earrings by Erica Lyons ($22 and $18). All from Parisian.

THE LAYERED LOOK this season will have you sitting on top of the world. Zach Schulke, a Huber Heights senior, attends Chaminade-Julienne. Here, he's wearing a long-sleeved vertical stripe button-up shirt, green graphic tee and distressed jean, all from Hollister ($39.50, $19.50, $15.50.) He also wears green Chuck Taylor Converse shoes ($36.50). All from Plato's Closet, a resale shop in Centerville, Beavercreek and opening in Huber Heights in September.

THIS FASHION LOOK gets high marks! Kendra Washington, an Ankeney Junior High 8th grader, dons a brown cardigan sweater (Old Navy, $24.50), blasted low-rise flair jeans (Levi's, $39.50), pink belt (Aeropostle, $14.50), beige tank (Abercrombie, $19.50), floral long-sleeve shirt (Fang, $19.99), pink Messenger bag (Old Navy, $24.50) and jewel flip-flops (Abercrombie, $24.50). Teen fashions with personal twist will score high marks

BYLINE: By Jill Radsken

BODY:

``American Idol" stylist Miles Siggins has worked with enough girls and guys to know that most kids want to dress like their friends.

But not EXACTLY like them.

Which is why he predicts the best back-to-school styles are the ones with unexpected twists. Boys may pair camouflage cargo pants with a fitted stripe shirt, while girls may opt for a funky version of a classic look: a tweed jacket with a brooch pinned to a pair of jeans.

``You have to feel comfortable in it, otherwise it will come across badly," said Siggins, who is also spokesman for RED, AOL's teen service.

Kids can make their individual fashion statements from any number of trends. Some will go retro, others a punk version of preppy a la Andre 3000. And, of course, denim still rules.

Stores are counting on the poncho to stay popular with girls, but the shrug also will be vying for shoulder space. As accessories go, brooches will be everywhere, as will scarves and ribbon belts.

For guys, it's all about layering. Along with the stripe button-downs and cargos, vintage sports tees and hooded sweatshirts are other options.

Camo is the favored print, and comes in all sorts of color combos. Our advice is to not overdo it. Girls can wear a pink-and-gray camo belt, and guys can do a long-sleeve shirt. But no full fatigues, please.

DUDE, WHERE'S MY CLASSROOM?

Guys can mix up any number of looks: punk and preppy, tailored and loose. Scott Hogan wears it well in an AE Fieldhouse stripe shirt, $36.50, and AE Jean, $48, both by American Eagle Outfitters. Black leather

Chuck Taylor All Stars by Converse, $120, at converse.com.

HEY SPORT

Boys will work hard AND play hard in the comfortable basics: thermal shirts and jeans. Nicholas Eure dons olive and khaki shirts, $9.98each, paired with 5-pocket jeans, $14.98, all by Green Dog, at Macy's. Reeboks, $49.99, at Filene's.

SCHOOL SPIRIT

Girls can't show their faces in homeroom without a poncho. Take the retro look even further with a suede mod skirt. Alyssa Soucy wears a sandpaper embroidered poncho with keyhole neck, $48, and shady pink cotton shirt with ribbon ties, $34, paired with floral suede skirt, $68, all at Talbots Kids. Pink suede embroidered boots by Morgan & Milo, $50, at Kidz by Footstock in Wellesley.

CLASSIC AND CUTE

Sequins are a girl's best friend. Alyssa Soucy wears a pink tone-on-tone logo turtleneck, $34, paired with chocolate trousers with sequin piping and trim, $68, both at Jacadi at The Heritage on the Garden, Boston.

GLAMOUR GIRL

Any self-respecting teenage fashionista should be able to pull all the trends together - tweed blazer, brooch or belt and jeans - with stuff from the store and Mom's closet. Autumn Sacramone wears a pink-and-black fringe blazer, $29.99, at T.J. Maxx, over a black-and-candy SoHo tee by Royal Brat, $28, at www.royalbrat.com. Also, blue jeans and black kitten heels, both $16.99, at T.J. Maxx.

Thanks to Plato's Closet, Chicago parents no longer will have to listen to their teenager standing in front of an overstuffed closet lamenting, "I have nothing to wear."

Teens now can take these "nothing-to-wear" brand-name clothes to Plato's Closet and receive money for their fashion rejects.

Plato's Closet is a young take on the age-old resale shop idea.

"Teens are known for being fickle. They may have worn an outfit once or twice and then get tired of it," says Tammy Toren, owner of the newly opened Chicago Plato's Closet in Lincoln Park. "Teens bring in these gently worn outfits for money or trade toward other items in the store."

The store is filled with some of the hottest brand names including Abercrombie & Fitch, Seven, Paul Frank, Nautica, Von Dutch, Coach, Kate Spade and Diesel.

All items are in good shape and in some cases the clothes never have been worn. On average, Plato's sells its items for 70 percent off the regular prices for new merchandise.

For Katya Parker, 23, Plato's Closet doesn't feel like a thrift store. "The stuff isn't jammed in and in disrepair. It looks like a normal retail store. I really don't see how it is much different from outlet stores."

On Plato's well-organized racks and 2,800-square-foot selling floor, it isn't hard to find a pair of Abercrombie & Fitch corduroy jeans for $16 ($49.50 at full retail), Seven jeans for $35 ($130-$160 at full retail) or Steve Madden boots for $18 ($45 at full retail).

"I love the Plato's concept," says Tayler Andrjeski, 13. "I like the brands it carries and they are way cheaper. I can't usually spend $70 to get a pair of Abercrombie & Fitch jean, but I can buy a pair here."

How to sell your gently used clothing to Plato's Closet:

It pays on the spot for everything it purchases and offers 30 percent to 40 percent of the price at which it will sell an item. Example: If Plato's plans to list a pair of jeans for $12, the seller will receive $3.60 to $4.80, depending on condition.

You never need an appointment to sell your stuff. Plato's buys clothes from the time stores open to an hour before they close.

It doesn't accept clothes with stains, holes or missing buttons. Clothes must be in good condition, in current style and be freshly laundered and folded in bags or boxes.

Plato's Closet reserves the right to reject items based on condition, inventory levels or past selling experience.

Former Indiana Factory Shops looks to fill vacancies with high-tech businesses.

BODY:

DALEVILLE, Ind. -- The struggling and near-vacant Indiana Factory Shops, one of five outlet malls in the state, has been sold to a new owner with an ambitious plan: Replace retail discounters with office space for high-tech businesses.

SugarOak Properties Inc. has purchased the mall from Horizon Group Properties Inc. for an undisclosed price and plans to revitalize the center into a bustling mixed-use campus of corporate headquarters, office space and maybe even education, with a subtle sprinkling of its retail past.

The renamed Heartland Crossings Business Center recently signed on its first major tenant, Muncie-based Sherry Laboratories Inc., which does independent scientific testing for the aerospace, environmental and automotive industries.

Ontario Corp., the Muncie-based parent company of Sherry Labs, will also move its headquarters to Heartland Crossings, bringing in about 80 employees at the two companies.

Inside a store where a giddy teenager once found that perfect pair of low-rise jeans, a high-paid scientist will test microbes from the environment.

"The retail was kind of dead," said Mike Lunsford, president of Coldwell Banker Lunsford Commercial Real Estate in Muncie, who is managing the 250,000-square-foot property's sale and leasing. "It's like it was built for this. It just has this campus sort of atmosphere that's perfect for high-tech."

Built in 1994, the mall 45 miles northeast of Indianapolis has struggled to make it as a retail center.

Plagued by vacancies, the center currently has just eight surviving retailers, which officials say they plan to keep in the mix of businesses.

That's good for a center whose goal is to attract even more high-tech companies, said Mark Glover, president of Sherry Labs.

Some of his employees who have been down to visit are thrilled that they will be able to shop at a Paul Harris store. A daycare center or restaurant wouldn't be a bad addition either, he said.

"We like the vision of the center," said Glover. "Whether it's more laboratories, retail, a daycare center, we'd love to be a part of it."

While high-tech tenants are the ultimate goal, the center's new owner is realistic and says the market will dictate the type of companies that call the center home.

"It has high visibility, easy access (to I-69), is well-built and has lots of parking," said Dan Baker, chief executive officer of SugarOak Properties of Herndon, Va., which is known for buying struggling outlet centers and transforming them into new uses. "While we'd like to see more high-tech, it's perfect for educational uses, call centers and administrative offices."

Not long ago it was perfect for shoppers looking for a good deal.

At its peak in the mid-1990s, the center boasted 52 retailers, including well-known names like Bass and Nine West, and a thriving food court. Now that has shrunk to a handful of survivors, including Paul Harris, Racer's Edge and Polo Ralph Lauren.

"What happened here?" said Ismail Gultepe, who stopped by the center this week en route to Toronto from St. Louis. "I used to come here as I was passing through and there were all these stores. And now there's nothing."

Horizon, the center's previous owner, declined to comment on the mall's downfall.

"It's just been in transition, sitting around," said Gina Slechta, spokeswoman for the company that owned the factory shops for five years.

It was "sitting around" as a ghost-town that's likely the victim of the ever-changing retail scene, said Ellen Tolley, spokeswoman for the National Retail Federation.

"Outlet centers were an unexpected success and others started duplicating," she said. "Today it's much easier for a consumer to go other places to find merchandise at low prices or with a huge selection all in one place."

Some of the most successful centers, including the Edinburgh Outlet Center, which is home to retailers like Nike, Nautica and Tommy Hilfiger, have reinvested in the centers.

Just last year, Edinburgh spent $500,000 for improvements to the center it says has more than 15 million visitors each year.

"It's easy to sit back on your laurels and watch customers come in," said Tolley. "To be successful in the retail industry you have to be constantly changing."

Mike Hiatt saw the changes in Daleville -- the loss of many stores -- from the counter of his Racer's Edge, a 7,000-square-foot store dedicated to NASCAR merchandise.

Even so, he stayed and is in his fourth year at the center, where he said business is great.

He calls himself a destination store; most customers come to the Daleville center just to see his shop.

"I'm not going anywhere," said Hiatt, who recently signed another three-year lease and moved his store to a new location that faces I-69.

As for the center's switch from retail to office, Hiatt said it's OK with him.

At The Best Deal Home Furniture store, a seven-year tenant at the center, Kay Buck is thrilled to see a revival -- even if it's not retail.

"Seems like we're already kind of picking up (business)," she said.

Baker, SugarOak's CEO, said that's his goal -- to keep current retailers happy.

"We want them to make it," he said. "They've made it this long. They've made it through all of this and you want to give them a chance to succeed."

Life seems relatively simple in Montauk, which is on the far eastern end of Long Island. But if you thought you had female problems, imagine what these fishermen go through--the sea is one of the most mysterious and unforgiving ladies of all.

Of course, she's also beautiful and bountiful, and these rugged individuals depend on her for their living.

We thought moody Montauk perfectly captured the unpredictable look of autumn. So we cast a line to see what fashion treasures await us this fall.

With space considerably scarce at retail, more and more wholesalers are opting to take the retail reins in their own hands, peddling their products themselves through company-owned stores. Nautica and Oshkosh B'Gosh are two fashion firms who've recently added 'specialty retailer' to their resume as they move beyond the typical outlet operation.

Late last month, Nautica debuted its first-ever kids'-only company store in the Paramus Park Mall in Paramus, NJ. Three additional kids' stores will open this fall in King of Prussia, PA, Columbia, MD and Hartford, CT. According to Jacqueline Hoffman, director of merchandising for Nautica Kids, children's represents a key area of growth and interest for Nautica at this time, prompting the company to opt for a kids-only store strategy rather than additional stores aimed at adults. Designed to resemble a Cape Cod vacation home, the 2,500-square-foot store's interior features clean white walls, bead-board detailing and hardwood floors. Customers can shop Nautica's newborn, infant and kids' 4 to 6X/7 apparel and accessories collections all under one roof. The store's opening marks the return of Nautica's newborn and girls' lines, which have been absent from the market for some time. Hoffman says that not only are the series of new tot shops a powerful branding tool, but they are also an ideal way for Nautica to reach its particular customer base directly where it prefers to shop - in a multi-store, specialty setting. "Our customer shops across many channels, with specialty retailers at the very top of the list. We are presenting them with our product in the format they are comfortable shopping in."

The veteran OshKosh B'Gosh - which has long been selling its children's wear through its nearly 160 outlet stores - has now made it a family affair. Early this year, it uncorked its pioneering, new family lifestyle retail concept with nine openings in eight states. The stores carry a complete assortment of men's, women's and children's apparel and accessories, along with home furnishings, toys, games and various seasonal items. According to chairman & chief executive Doug Hyde, though men's wear has been performing slightly below expectations, sales of children's and women's products at the new lifestyle stores have been very encouraging.

Discount apparel and home fashions retailer Gordmans has opened a new 48,000-square-foot retail store in Madison's East Towne Mall.

As the latest addition to the recently renovated shopping center, the new anchor store between JC Penney and the soon-to-be opened Dick's Sporting Goods features a variety of name-brand clothing, footwear, jewelry, home furnishings and toys at prices 30 to 50 percent below full-priced competitors.

Now with 46 locations in 10 states, including two in Appleton, the discount retailer aims "to provide a fun, unique and energetic shopping experience for Madison consumers," Jeff Gordman, Gordmans chief executive, said in a statement.

The Madison store is slightly smaller than the family-owned company's other locations spanning from Colorado to Ohio, but local store manager Laurie Nelson said the opening has been met with much anticipation.

"I have friends from St. Louis who shop at Gordmans," she said. Since they live here now, "they were excited to see one open here."

Gordmans offers competitive prices because its buyers make large volume purchases from manufacturers such as Adidas, Guess, Liz Claiborne, Nautica, Nike and Ralph Lauren. But Nelson said, "We're not a store for basics. If you shop us and see something you like, you'd better buy it because it might not be there when you come back."

Even though the retailer offers current products in complete size runs and a selection of colors, inventory is limited to the stock on hand.

The store, which opened Sept. 2 and is planning grand opening events Friday and Saturday, has been "pretty busy," said Nelson. Shoppers looking for bargains to outfit their kids with back-to-school clothing and shoes hit the store over the Labor Day weekend.

The store is expected to be another positive draw for East Towne, shopping center officials said.

"Since our renovation in 2003, our traffic has been up all year long," said Kelli Riollo, marketing director for East Towne Mall. "We expect Gordmans to be a great traffic generator. It's new, it's exciting, and we just see our numbers increasing all the time."

In 2003, Gordmans did just over $300 million in gross sales. Their locations typically employ a staff of 80.

Howard Grody, vice president of mall leasing with CBL & Associates Properties, owners of East Towne Mall, said in a statement: "Gordmans is an excellent complement to our diversified retail mix at East Towne Mall, and we are excited to bring this new store to the Madison area."

BODY:

Fifteen-year-old Allison Hiel of Barrhaven, Ont., has been bitten by the before-and-after bug. Room makeovers made popular by TV shows such as Trading Spaces convinced the high school student she could transform her babyish room into a sophisticated teenage retreat.

This summer, teal green walls and wallpaper with cherubs fishing from a bridge have given way to soft yellow surroundings with a cranberry accent wall, new curtains, shelves and picture frames showcasing friends.

The Grade 10 student also plans to make a fabric and ribbon note board after watching instructions on a home decorating show.

Meanwhile, brother Andrew, 16, who helped a friend paint his room, ditched the pinkish-beige wall colour he'd been staring at for 15 years in favour of a grey-taupe and a green accent wall. The Grade 11 student spends considerable time in his room doing homework and, like his younger sister, watching TV. Being surrounded by colours he enjoyed was critical.

Kids are the latest demographic to join the home-improvement scene, and some are serious interior decorating junkies.

"Oh my God, they're so into it!" said Inside Out Design Studio design director Jennifer Carpenter of the young teenage girls who pepper her with decorating questions. "It comes straight from all these home-improvement shows, which are done on a dime."

Laurie Hiel, Allison's mother, says if her daughter could, "she would watch them 24 hours a day."

For kids with near-invisible budgets, the shows have great appeal. So does the proof that, with guidance, they can transform rooms. TLC's Trading Spaces: Boys versus Girls pits teams of boys and girls aged eight to 14 against each other to see who can impress the most with fabulous room makeovers.

Kids are taught to safely hammer, nail and use power tools, with supervision.

"They love it," said Jordin Ruderman, one of the show's designers. "Usually, the kids either like painting or the power tools. A lot of times it's because they've done neither before."

The gratification of seeing a wall pulse with colour or attaching together two pieces of wood is a rush.

The selection of courses, books and magazines teaching kids how to decorate their bedrooms is slim compared to the volumes of adult-oriented material, but that may change.

Designer Diana Saunders of Welcome Home Interiors in Williamsburg, Ont., recently staged her first Decorate Your Room workshop for kids after getting queries from young teens and parents.

While much depends on the individual child, "I think they can do a lot of it themselves," said Saunders, who has been teaching decorative arts to children for 13 years.

By Grade 8, "you're probably capable of doing some painting," Carpenter agreed, although a parent may need to demonstrate how to prep a room and roll out paint. Carpenter also advised the Hiel siblings on colour selection, steering Allison away from an intense marigold.

A crucial first step for kids planning to redo their room is recognizing what they use their room for - doing homework, watching TV, playing games or hanging out with friends.

Decorating magazines or catalogues can help kids zero in on what they like, suggests Saunders. So will a favourite storybook for younger children.

Your furniture and wall colours should be timeless and grow with you, while inexpensive accessories reflect the trend of the moment. Once you've lost enough cookie crumbs in your Austin Powers shag rug, for example, trash it for something else that's au courant.

Favourite clothes are a tipoff to favourite colours, and with fashion designers like Ralph Lauren and Nautica commanding the home decor seas as well, trends from fashion runways are repeated in room accessories almost immediately.

But beware excessive use of black and other cave-like hues. A better solution is black as an accent in window treatments, comforters or other accessories, with neutral wall colours.

A bedroom is a child's sanctuary, an escape from adults, parents, even siblings. It's important for parents to help kids feel "they have their own private space that they can take their friends to," Carpenter stressed.

BODY:

Once called "investment dressing," men's fall clothing features classic elements such as bulky knits, opulent shearling coats and vests, striped suits, basic denim and lots of brown. There are fresh, innovative twists, yet these clothing pieces should satisfy even the most conservative dresser.

"We've got a lot more brown in the store than we've ever had," said Bryan Beecroft of Beecroft & Bull Ltd. in Richmond, Va. "It's not the flat, Hershey-bar brown, but really interesting mixes. For example, I'm looking at a pair of Canali slacks that are really a mixture of about six colors, including brown, rust and olive. Today's clothing is constructed from better, lighter-weight and stronger fabrics."

This fall, many of them will have a soft touch: Fur trim, shearling, leather and velvet fabrics were abundant in the designer collections.

However, men might consider a few crunches and sit-ups before they shop. According to the National Association of Men's Sportswear Buyers, the emphasis is on the waist this season, with cropped outer jackets, tucked-in sweaters and novelty belts.

Designer Kenneth Cole emphasized elegant turtlenecks, felt trousers and slim suits. A subdued palette of graphite gray, navy and chocolate brown was highlighted by flashes of color: plum shirts and pistachio-green liners under polished overcoats.

Nautica designer David Chu was inspired by such adventurers as South Pole explorer Sir Ernest Shackleton to create the NX Nautical Weather System, a new range of coats that offer moisture-wicking, water resistance and wind resistance. A more elegant warmth can be found in Nautica's shearling vests and deerskin jackets.

The smart and simple basics for fall, according to designer Michael Kors, are a pair of distressed jeans worn with a cashmere or merino wool turtleneck, cut comfortably close to the body. However, the designer accessorized his clothes with towering fur hats and paisley silk scarves, along with carcoats with plush sheepskin lining and trenchcoats in luggage suede.

Kors is one of several designers who included oversize peak lapels on his one-button suits. But his were constructed from lush materials such as glen-plaid stretch flannel, velvet and even suede.

Once an evening-only fabric, velvet now thrives in men's sportswear. Perry Ellis creative director Jerry Kaye had Howard Hughes on the brain while adding velvet trim on the pocket edges of trousers. "I liked that he straddled the worlds of Hollywood and business," Kaye said. "I wanted to take that '30s look and make it fresh - how Hughes would wear his clothes today."

At DKNY, Donna Karan sent her models out wearing tapered trousers, velveteen blazers and cashmere thermal blazers. Karan also gave a slight nod to military style with leather cartridge belts and twill shirts tucked into wool pants.

By far the biggest accessories to emerge from the collections were oversize fur hats worthy of an alpine ski team. That trend may not survive south of the Mason-Dixon line.

"Layering is always better than wearing one heavy thing," said Bryan Beecroft. "Bulky sweaters look great on the runway, but I haven't been able to sell 'heavy' in many years. Let's face it, in Richmond it may not freeze once before the fat man goes down the chimney."

There seems to be little middle ground with movie critics about "Wimbledon," which opened in theaters nationwide Friday.

Wesley Morris of the Boston Globe took issue with the sport itself:

"There is slapping, slipping, sliding, and the needless, hard-to-explain diving of the sort that you might recognize from college intramurals or phys ed. [Paul] Bettany's tactic is to stick out his racquet and lunge at the ball, as though the object of the game is to catch it and cook it up for dinner."

Lisa Rose of the Newark Star-Ledger enjoyed the tennis action more than the romantic story line:

"Crafty camera-work creates volleys of dazzling velocity and mythic power. The epic duels across the net are so kinetic, one wishes the film would keep its eye on the ball and stop straying off the court. Unfortunately it does."

Trivia time: How many Grand Slam tournament finals did the now-retired Marcelo Rios of Chile reach?

Heeeere's Johnny: Television commentator Johnny Miller told Carlos Monarrez of the Detroit Free Press that he grew into his outspokenness as a kid growing up in San Francisco.

"I came out of this group in the Olympic Club that were the biggest needlers, and we had so many different kinds of games and gambling games," Miller said. "When you played, you had to handle the needle, and give it too. I think that's where it started, where I learned to be combative with playing the game and handling pressure."

No go: Even the politicians are reluctant to wade into the pool of controversy known as the NHL lockout.

A reporter in Quebec asked Canadian Prime Minister Paul Martin whether he would get involved to help resolve the standoff.

"I don't think so," he said. "If I thought it would help, I sure would."

Lockout, Part II: The basic job requirements of a hockey player will have some bearing on negotiations, or so says the Detroit Red Wings' Darren McCarty.

"We're not professional people in other professional sports," he told the Detroit News. "We're pretty straightforward, and we beat the tar out of each other for a living. So we're not going to get pushed around off the ice, either. We've always stuck to our guns and done what we believe is fair."

In the swim: Olympic star swimmer Amanda Beard is back competing in the water again -- but not in the pool.

Nashville is jam-packed with shopping bargains and inexpensive things to do

By Mary Hance / Staff

If you are a bargain hunter, Nashville is a good place to be.

Not only do our parks and libraries offer a ton of fun and free educational programs, we have a host of first-rate concerts, theater, dance and lectures - that are free or inexpensive and open to the public - through our colleges and universities. And, yes, we have lots of places to shop on a shoestring. Here are some of my best bets:

o Thrift-store shoppers have a lot to choose from with more than 25 Goodwill stores, five Salvation Army Stores, several Southern Thrift stores and lots of one-of-a-kind shops such as the Lions Club, This 'N' That, Bethlehem Center's Shopping Bag, New Life Thrift, and Music City Thrift. Unique is the Goodwill Outlet, 905 Ninth Ave. N., where you can buy clothes by the pound - $1.49 a pound - and other items at 75% off what they were originally priced in the Goodwill stores.

o Consignment is also big, with dozens of weekend clothing sales in the spring and fall and plenty of year-round shops for women, such as Consigning Women, Clothes Horse, Designer Consigner, Fashion Boutique and Alteration, Consignment Classics, Designer Finds, Clothes Horse, Bargain Boutique, Designer Renaissance, RazzMaTazz, Generations, Play it Again Ma'am - all in Nashville.

There are also Phase II in Murfreesboro and Second Time Around in Hendersonville. Children's consignment shops include Tiny Traditions in Nashville, Hand Me Ups in Dickson, New 2 U in Lebanon, Kangaroo's Pouch in Franklin, The Cottage in Mt. Juliet, L Munchkins & Mommies in Springfield and Little Ones 'N' Reruns In Hendersonville.

o The Ladies of Charity sales every spring and fall are a big draw, with large inventories of men's, women's and children's clothes. You can find most of the year-round shops in the Yellow Pages and the weekend sales in The Tennessean's classifieds or online at www.kidsconsignmentguide.com.

o If you are after used books, you are definitely in luck in our area. Bookman/Bookwoman in Hillsboro Village, Rhino Books on Granny White Pike, the Book Attic near RiverGate, Ms. B's Books in Hendersonville and Bettie's Books in Lebanon all sell books at half of retail or less. Most of them buy, sell, and trade. And maybe the best deal of all is the Second Saturday Book Sale that the Metro Public Library holds the second Saturday of each month at its Donelson Branch.

o If you are not in the pre-owned frame of mind and want to buy new things, there are lots of options, too. Hecht's Bellevue Center store has a Clearance Zone on the first floor near the men's department that routinely sells clearance items from area Hecht's stores - with many items 60%-80% off the original prices. It is a real deal.

o Outlet malls are also worth checking. Hundred Oaks has some outlet stores, including Off 5th, Burlington Coat Factory and the new Ross' Dress for Less. Opry Mills is a mixture of full retail and factory outlets, including very popular outlets such as Banana Republic, Nautica, Tommy Hilfiger and The Gap. And, of course, the Prime Outlets mall in Lebanon is a big draw with more than 50 stores.

Other places that we cheapos love to visit:

o Teens and young adults seem to love the resale stores such as Planet Xchange near CoolSprings and Plato's Closet with stores near Hickory Hollow and CoolSprings. You can bring clothes in and sell them on the spot - and buyers get a great deal, too.

o BNA Direct, at 311 Peabody St., sells department-store closeouts such as bedding, clothes, shoes, purses, etc., at great prices.

o Habitat Homestore, which sells building supplies and other items that have been donated by homeowners, contractors and building-supply companies, is at 1001 Eighth Ave. S. (254-4663)

o The monthly flea market at the Tennessee State Fairgrounds is the fourth Saturday of every month and is open Friday through Sunday. Admission is free, parking $3. (862-5016)

o Norbert's Home Decorating Outlet, 3734 Nolensville Road. They buy truckloads of household accessories from Home Decorator catalog and other places at good discounts.

Hope this helps to make your bargain hunting more productive - and fun!

P.S. I also invite you to become a regular Ms. Cheap reader - and contributor. I am always looking for good ideas to share in my column. I also have a Bargain Bin column that runs on Fridays featuring good sales and cheap and free events coming up that weekend or that week ahead. Thanks for reading. Stay cheap.

Star power: The innovative Zac Posen will present his first West Coast runway show here next month, the same spring collection he just showed in New York. This year's winner of the emerging talent award from the Council of Fashion Designers of America (and recently backed by Sean Combs) will be the star attraction of the locally produced International Fashion Week, at Pier 48 on Oct. 21-23.

This catwalk event -- 10 runway shows in three days featuring designers from India, New York and San Francisco -- comes on the heels of San Francisco's first Fashion Week, held last month at the Palace of Fine Arts.

Getting the 24-year-old Posen to commit took "lots and lots of phone calls to his mother," said event producer Jacinta Law. It was Suzie Woodward Morris, a San Francisco image consultant and friend of Zac's mother, Susan Posen, who got the ball rolling. Since Susan Posen also happens to be the chief executive of her son's company, it was a done deal as soon as Law agreed to give the Posens complete control.

"I thought it was a unique opportunity for him," Morris said. "I want to help spread his image across the world."

Posen has proven he's not a flash in the pan. His spring collection included low-slung, slouchy tuxedo pants, a series of sleek but not form-fitting white suits, a diamond-patterned dress that sparkled with purple, gold and silver beading and a fringed hem, and a black gown with diaphanous layers and peekaboo details.

Other designers confirmed to attend the Pier 48 shows are New York's Lloyd Klein, the veteran gown designer Stephen Burrows, Zang Ttoi and two of India's top designers, Malini Ramani and Manish Arora.

San Francisco names include Joseph Domino and possible shows by Erica Tanov and Deborah Hampton.

Law is still putting the final touches on the production, to be held in the 100,000-square-foot space.

"We're going to try and create a world in here; there will be lounges with music and food set up to resemble cafes in different cities, like Paris, or Rome," she said.

Watch this space for updates, or visit www.jacintadesigns.com.

Show us what you've got: The annual "Fresh Faces in Fashion" GenArt show (the multi-city group that showcases young designers) takes place Oct. 15 at the Regency Center, 1300 Van Ness Ave. in San Francisco. Designers in this year's show are: Carl Borja (evening dresses and fancy fleece), Latifa Medjdoub of Latifa (knitwear), Tressa Williams of Fierce Couture (Latex fetish wear), Roge Allen of Hieros (colorful men's wear). Accessories designers are: Susan Jane Designs (reconfigured vintage jewelry), Stephanie B. (fabric and leather handbags) and Elsa Smith Design Inc. (chunky sterling silver jewelry). Tickets are $30 to $40. Call (415) 284-9400, or visit www.genart.org.

Start planning your trip: Macy's annual Passport fashion show and AIDS fund-raiser comes around for its 22nd year with a three-day run beginning Tuesday.

Expect the usual hard bodies, thumping music and Macy's fall fashions, at Fort Mason Center in San Francisco.

In its early years, as one of the country's first major AIDS fund-raisers, the event attracted big crowds, big buzz and big celebrities, including Elizabeth Taylor, but the actress is making few personal appearances these days, and it has not been confirmed whether she'll be attending this year's event.

But New York designer Michael Kors, also fresh off the spring runways in New York, is scheduled to take a bow at the closing night show on Thursday.

Tuesday is "teen night," a private event for Bay Area high school students.

On Wednesday actress Jennifer Tilly will introduce the show. Mario Cantone (Charlotte's fast-talking gay friend from "Sex and the City") will be the celebrity auctioneer both Wednesday and Thursday nights.

Oh, right, and then there's the fashion.

There will be men's and women's looks from Kors' new, lower-priced "Michael" line, which borrows a little bit of this (cable sweaters, skinny pants) and a little bit of that (oversize handbags, furry vests) from his signature collection.

Also on the runway: a Brazilian segment sponsored by MAC makeup; vintage-inspired separates by Anna Sui; cocktail dresses by A.B.S. Allen Schwartz; underwear and lingerie from V.F. Intimates and Nautica Sleepwear, and children's clothes from With Love, Barbie.

To date, the event has raised $18 million for AIDS research.

Tickets start at $65. For information, call (800) 334-6158 or visit www.ticketmaster.com.

Wait, there's more: Given the fashion vibe of the moment, this weekend's big Vintage Fashion Expo, wrapping up today at the Masonic Center auditorium on Nob Hill, should prove irresistible to anyone on the hunt for brooches, leopard-print bags and vintage furs.

Nearly 100 vendors will be at 1111 California St. from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. today. Admission is $10. Information: www.vintageexpo.com. E-mail Sylvia Rubin at srubin@sfchronicle.com.

Whatever happens in November, the president will be a Yale man -- though the term doesn't mean quite what it used to. It's not that Yale College has become academically less selective. Yale is now much harder to get into than it was in the days of Kerry and Bush, and if former Yale men had to reapply now, many would be quickly turned away. Some might even be encouraged to brush up for a while at a community college or to consider vocational training. "You know, you don't have to go to college," the admissions counselor might say, "even if your name is Chauncey Walker-Forbes Woolsey IV."

A Yale man used to be somebody who looked the part. The students who are admitted into the new, meritocratic Yale, however, don't dress like Yale men. (Neither, for that matter, do Bush and Kerry anymore. They wear corporate mufti: the inoffensive dark suit, white shirt and boring blue tie.) Yale students now look and dress like college students everywhere. They wear T-shirts and bluejeans pretty much 24 hours a day, and don't always bother to change them with faithful regularity. They wear sneakers and combat boots, or else just shower flip-flops, and to save their lives they couldn't tell you the difference between a wingtip and a Weejun.

When my wife and I packed our son off to Yale in 1995, we sent him with just one item of even semiformal clothing, a navy blazer from Brooks Brothers. Four years later it was exhumed from his closet, unworn, though not unwrinkled, and still in the original garment bag. It was like something from a time capsule.

Back in the "happy, golden, bygone days," to quote from the Yale alma mater, "Bright College Years," Yale men were different. (There were no Yale women until the fall of 1969.) The ideal Yale man in those days -- which lasted until the fall of 1963, when Yale changed admissions policies and began seeking out the kind of Yale man with higher College Boards -- was a Cole Porter-ish sort of fellow, stylish and well connected, who spoke with just a hint of a lockjaw accent. He was John Lindsay, to pick a single, perfect example.

The Yale man dressed impeccably in the preppy uniform of the day, though "preppy" wasn't in wide use then. "Natural shoulder" was what men's magazines called the Yale look, and for decades the clothing stores near campus at Elm and York Streets in New Haven were the natural-shoulder capital of the universe. Its bulwarks were Fenn-Feinstein and J. Press. In New York, not far from the Yale Club, there was Haberdasher's Row, commencing at 44th Street and Madison Avenue: Brooks Brothers, known as just "the Brothers"; J. Press (there was also one in Cambridge, Mass.); and Chipp, which had a retail store but also did big business in custom tailoring. (We have Chipp to thank for, among other innovations, jackets and trousers of patchwork madras.)

In the 1950's and 60's, an experienced observer could tell where a Yale man shopped just by his shirt: plain pocket meant Fenn-Feinstein; pocket with flap, J. Press; and no pocket at all, the Brothers, which in those days didn't believe in shirt pockets, perhaps because almost all their suits still came with vests. Vest aside, to determine the origin of a suit might take closer observation; if it had a lining of bright red silk (like several of the suits of one of my classmates, a guy so Cole Porter-ish that, like Porter, he kept a piano in his room), it was most likely a custom job from Chipp; if it had a button fly, it was probably from the Brothers, which still sold such garments up on the geezers' floor, where you could also get voluminous high-waisted boxers of the kind sometimes on display in the Yale Club locker room. They had three buttons at the top and came up almost to the nipples, as if made with a built-in cummerbund.

All the sartorial niceties of the Yale style began to erode, as I've suggested, with the enrollment of what became the class of 1968 -- my class, as it happens, and also the class of George W. Bush. I seem to recall the president-to-be going sockless and wearing corduroys and cable-knit sweaters, but that could describe any number of us. He did not cut the figure of, say, Strobe Talbott, another classmate, who became deputy secretary of state during the Clinton administration. Strobe was a full-fledged intellectual, so he could carry off the affectation of wearing plaid Bermudas well into November.

But the barbarians were already among us -- guys in jeans, with long hair, beads and headbands, guys so brilliant they didn't care what they looked like. Yale in those days still required a coat and tie in the dining halls, but in some Yale colleges a knotted shoelace counted as a tie. There was even a short-lived debate about whether, since the regulations did not specify a shirt, going bare-chested was acceptable. Eventually, even some younger faculty members began dressing like the students, not the other way around. It was much remarked, for example, when Charles Reich, a Yale law professor and the author of "The Greening of America," began showing up for class in jeans. Even he drew the line, however; his jeans, as some freethinkers noted with disdain, were always creased and ironed. He was trying to pass as a hippie, but he was still a Yale man.

THERE'S THE RUNWAY, AND THEN THERE'S REAL LIFE ALTHOUGH DESIGNERS SHOWING IN NEW YORK AND CLOTHING MANUFACTURERS MEETING IN VEGAS AGREE ON SOME STYLE POINTS.

"Dry heat" my Aunt Fanny.

As I step out of the airport in Las Vegas on an August afternoon for a spring/summer 2005 apparel market -- one of the largest in the world -- it occurs to me that while there are many similarities between party-hearty South Florida and party-even-heartier Vegas, the weather ain't among them.

"When people tell me it's a dry heat here, I tell them so is a convection oven," said Daniel Storey, a natural-born Lauderdalean who is now a costume designer based just off The Strip. "Who wants to live in a convection oven? Another difference between Fort Lauderdale and Las Vegas is that it is always terminal taupe here. There isn't a green tree in sight. They just don't have the landscaping here that we have in Florida."

In August, the temperature here climbs to 102 degrees even before you've had a chance to start nursing your hangover. Storey told me that on really hot days the mercury climbs -- quickly -- to 118. And at night, even the full moon (is it real or hotel shtick?) seems to be beaming hot rays.

What's the difference between desert heat and tropical heat? Well, with desert heat you don't sweat as much (although sometimes you wish you would so you'd cool down a tad) and there are significantly fewer bugs.

It's just too hot for even insects. Think about that.

It's even too hot for fashion.

Ironic that fashion's main apparel and accessory market is held here twice a year with more than 3,300 clothing manufacturers exhibiting in more than 930,000 square feet at the Las Vegas Convention Center. And while there is some fabulousness going on, this is really commerce; buyers and sellers meeting to put clothes in everything from boutiques to mass market chains from a menu of 5,000 brands and private labels.

All of them come to the desert and do their level best to look cool in the heat.

But that heat, that dry heat, seems to affect people here: These are the worst-dressed people on the face of the planet. I'm talking about the visitors and the residents. No, seriously; hideous clothes on poorly groomed people (the worst haircuts you've ever seen) in gaudy environs make this the black hole of style. And I'm not only talking about The Strip (which occupies as much interest to them as South Beach does for us).

I think it is because Vegas -- unlike SoFla -- is an insular world. What happens here, does indeed stay here ... stuck in time. I'd estimate everyone to be in their 80s. The 1980s that is.

Even in the suburbs, the yards are enclosed by high fences as a barrier against sandstorms. If you do manage to climb up on a trashcan or a sturdy barbecue (I'm not saying I did, mind you) to see the horizons, there are mountains forming another visual barrier to turn your gaze back, back, back to The Strip. Despite replicas of worldly icons everywhere, it's hard to see what the rest of the globe is up to in Las Vegas ... which is about as anti-fashion as it gets.

The title MAGIC Marketplace is a misnomer. Back in the day, 1933 to be specific, when men's togs were the sole domain of Gentlemen's Quarterly and Esquire magazines, the Men's Apparel Guild in California (MAGIC) was born. In 1989, the market moved to Vegas to better handle the crowds (90,000 people attend). The one thing that Vegas does as well as, if not better than, anywhere else is move large groups of people around efficiently. In 1995 the market expanded to include women's wear, ergo, the inaccurate title.

These are mall-friendly clothes. Unlike the designer runway shows (for the same spring/summer season) that ended last week in New York, these clothes are not proposals, they are fact. The clothing shown at MAGIC is not directional, leading us all to new hem lengths, silhouettes and patterns. This is reality. Not runway.

Designers propose, and then have to wait to see what ideas fly before they make, market and ship.

Manufacturers are cannier. They wait and see which designer ideas take root and then extrapolate that idea into every price point possible.

Thus, the striped-shirt-untucked-over-flat-front-pants seen in last year's menswear designer shows -- Kenneth Cole, Nautica by David Chu, Matthew Earnest -- is now a uniform. The look seems to have "legs" in a big way well into spring/summer 2005 because at MAGIC it was ubiquitous.

And in women's wear, that seaside chic look espoused by Michael Kors, Carolina Herrera, BCBG by Max Azria, Nicole Miller, Luca Oriandi for Luca Luca, and Anna Sui has been interpreted in retail as sunny colors in sundresses, skirted suits, capri pants, clam-diggers, bikini tops matched with jams, and bright white denim miniskirts under citrus-hued tanks.

"I've noticed a lot more bright colors," said Pierre Jubinville, the owner of Audace on Las Olas Boulevard, who was at MAGIC to buy. "There's a lot of bright orange and yellows in swimwear. And even in denim and that [category] of clothing. It's a trend that comes from Europe, I think. I know it's in Canada, too. They are less conservative colors."

But conservatism has its place, too. as evidenced with the revival of preppy ... remixed and liberally sampled from by urban fashionistas such as Phat Farm, Sean John, Steve Harvey, Ecko, FUBU and Lilly Pulitzer.

Yes, Lilly Pulitzer is now hip with hip-hoppers. It's like magic.

PRAIRIE, PUCCI AND PANTS

Having looked at the fantasy of the runway shows in New York and the reality of the market shows in Las Vegas, we know these trends to be true for spring/summer 2005:

Prairie and dirndl skirts (hems are coming down) or full femme skirts a la The Stepford Wives.

For the office, it's knee-length skirts worn with shrunken jackets, or pantsuits with flat-front trousers in creamy colors.

Clean lines in denim jeans.

Easter egg shades and citrus colors (orange, peach, tangerine, citron).

Pucci, graffiti and spray-painted patterns.

Capris (especially in white and worn with gold accessories).

Halter sundresses with full skirts (you get extra points if it has a handkerchief hemline).

For the boys, must-haves include a pair of white pants (trousers, clam diggers, walking shorts) worn with a sleeveless T-shirt.

Business suits make a comeback, beating back the onslaught of casual Friday dress

BYLINE: JONATHAN NELSON, Columbian staff writer

BODY:

Psst! Here's the hot fashion tip for the fall season and beyond business suits are back.

Sport coats, dress shirts and even the necktie are beating back casual Friday.

Just ask 23-year-old Stanley Mak. The club-hopping men's department manager at the Vancouver J.C. Penney store noticed a few months ago the increasing number of men at nightclubs sporting dress jackets and more formal clothing.

Mak's not just speaking anecdotally. He's watched men's business clothing sales jump 23 percent since January. The bulk of those buyers are men between the ages of 18 and 30 who are looking for a more versatile, yet sophisticated look.

"They don't want to wear a suit for just one event, they want it for different occasions," Mak said.

Mak's experience is part of a growing trend nationally where tailored clothing sales between January and July were up 22.5 percent from the previous year, according to the NPD Group, a New York marketing information company. This follows slumping sales in 2003 that finished at $3.5 billion, an 11 percent decline from 2002.

Retail analysts say the recent shift isn't exclusive to a boutique haberdasher, but is trickling down to department stores and even discount companies like Target.

Regional trend

Clothing executives said the recent reversal holds true for the Pacific Northwest, a corner of the country never accused of following the conservative dress associated with the East Coast or big West Coast metropolises like San Francisco or Los Angeles.

"It's one of the most exciting things that's happened in a long time, the move away from the casual schlumpy," said Hope Brick, vice president and fashion director for Meier & Frank.

That look, which was eventually named casual Friday, burst onto the workplace in the mid-1990s and promised to liberate men from the requisite white dress shirt and constrictive ties.

The Levi Strauss & Co. was just one of several clothing retailers that latched onto the movement. Casual became synonymous with Levi's Dockers clothing line as an aggressive marketing campaign pushed the image of confident men dressed in khakis and shirts minus ties lounging around the office or sharing a drink after a round of golf.

But for some sartorial minded, the look was anathema to professionalism.

A backlash arose as the style bled into other days of the week and people took even greater license with the intent. The poster child for everything wrong with casual Friday became the techno whiz featured in so many stories that came to work dressed in flip-flops, shorts, T-shirt and hair that looked as if it was styled with an egg beater.

Fashion experts say the pendulum is swinging back to a more classical look.

The double-digit growth in business clothing sales could partly be explained by men who are diving into their closets and finding that after years of wearing casual clothes, suits no longer fit or are out of style.

An NPD survey last spring found the top reason men shop is to replace worn-out items and replenish their wardrobes.

Injecting fusion into fashion

Traditional suits, however, aren't the target of the buying binge.

Fashion buyers say the new trend is to mix and match formal and casual clothing a look dubbed "fusion."

Brick said a number of factors are influencing the buying habits of men. Some of it is a reflection of pop culture, the emergence of the metrosexual and the reality show "Queer Eye for the Straight Guy."

Money is also influencing decisions as interchangeable pieces are bought to stretch shrinking wardrobe budgets.

"They are picking up pieces that play to a seven-day week," Brick said.

That translates to a sport coat teamed with a dressy bottom during the day and torn jeans at night.

Brick said business clothing sales at Meler & Frank's Vancouver store are up, but declined to discuss specific figures. The company's most recent filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission said that despite second-quarter sales that didn't meet expectations, "ladies' suits, men's furnishings and tailored clothing performed well."

Brick said the trend also holds true for the Pacific Northwest, where style trends are perceived to be dramatically different than those in other parts of the country.

It is not uncommon in Portland and Seattle to attend the opera, a traveling Broadway play or walk into a fine dining restaurant and find patrons wearing everything from tuxedos and formal gowns to casual clothes.

During "Miss Saigon's" recent run in Portland, one man attended the musical dressed in shorts, T-shirt and Teva sandals. He mingled with contemporaries decked out in suits and ties.

Brick said the only real difference in sales between the company's Oregon and California stores is that cold-weather items sell sooner in the north.

The clothing shift doesn't mean an obituary for casual Friday, just that the attitude is taking on a more-polished look, Brick said.

In some instances, companies are forcing employees to adopt a more buttoned-up look. Target Corp., for instance, recently updated its clothing requirements for employees at its corporate office in Minneapolis.

The new policy ends the "business casual" dress in favor of a more formal look. That means a sport coat and tie for men and jacket for women wearing a sleeveless blouse. A more relaxed ensemble is acceptable on Fridays.

Dean Alsup, branch manager for the Vancouver A.G. Edward's office, said the corporate and numerous regional offices allow for a looser clothing standard on Fridays. Not so in Vancouver, where traditional suit and ties for men are required throughout the week.

"It's not what pleases the employee, it's what pleases the client," Alsup said. "I think the client expects professionalism and that is more readily expressed with proper business attire."

Brick said if history holds, this should be the decade of more elegant dressing as clothing cycles tend to run in 10-year increments varying between traditional and casual styles.

* Components of the business suit, the layered look of a shirt, tie, vest and coat, come from Europe and date back to the end of the 17th century.

* The modern necktie, considered the essential part of a man's suit, dates back 350 years to Croatia.

* Brooks Brothers claims to have introduced the first ready-to-wear suits in 1845, which the company says was a particular hit during the California Gold Rush in 1849 as men didn't have time to wait for a tailor.

Darrick Peppers used to spiff it up big time in one of his favorite six- or seven-button suits to hit the clubs with his wife, Deanna.

And when it came to shopping, Peppers was, well, hot.

"Before I had a family, shopping was one of my favorite things," Peppers, 23, said with a laugh. "Now, it's shopping for the family.

"When you have a child, you can't go out and get a lot of things you used to. I might go out and buy a couple of T-shirts, but. . . ."

But no regrets. Peppers and his wife, who live on the South Side, are the parents of 4-year-old Amari, and another little Peppers is on the way.

"If it's a boy, I might be finished if he likes clothes as much as me," said Dad, who has worked in the quality-control department at Insight Cable for three years.

Even though his social life has been altered, Peppers still steps out in style. Some things a well-dressed man just can't sacrifice.

"We don't do the clubs anymore," he said. "Now it's church and Bible study and Sunday school. I'll throw on a suit for church."

In fact, he likes dressing up so much that he would like to have a job where he wears a suit and tie.

"I just like wearing a suit and tie," he said. "It's a clean look."

His work uniform is shirt and jeans or khaki shorts with work boots. At home: jeans, T-shirt, cap and one of his three pairs of Air Force One athletic shoes.

"I may throw a (sports) jersey on, but I'm not into the hip-hop look," he said. "I just want it casual and comfortable."

But not the preppy-ish kind of casual and comfortable from, say, the Gap, where his wife happens to work.

"I really don't wear the Gap," Peppers said, good-naturedly. "Some of their clothes aren't really me."

Box Story:What I wear

Fashion Reporter Marshall Hood takes an occasional look at what people are wearing and thinking about fashion. Today he talks with Darrick Peppers, 23, of the South Side.

Fashion inspirations

- * Style mentors: "Jay-Z, Steve Harvey, Eddie Long, Deion Sanders. When Jay-Z comes out with French-cuff shirts and cuff links, everybody has to have them."
- * Favorite brands: "Nautica, Guess? jeans, Tommy Hilfiger. I've got a few Puffy (designer Sean 'P. Diddy' Combs) velours. But I try to stay away from the big names because they can be costly."
- * You love suits. What do you look for? "It has to have six, seven or eight buttons. I try to stay away from two- and three-button styles. (The former) are more fashionable, more stylish. I like the pants a little baggy and cuffed. And the shirt and tie I wear it with have to match."
- * How did you meet your wife? "We knew each other in elementary school, started dating in 1997 and got married (asks wife)...Feb. 14, 2002."
- * Last job you had before Insight? "Hanging drywall. I loved it."
- * Bengals or Browns? "The Browns. I think they'll do all right this season -- I hope they'll do all right this season."
- * Last movie seen? "Collateral. Good movie."
- * You're a golfer. Best course ever played? "Bent Tree."
- * Clothing item you will never give up: "My caps from Champs. I may throw it on straight back or to the side or to the front. Just depends how I feel."

BODY:

SAN FRANCISCO -- Macy's brings its 22nd Annual Passport event benefitting AIDS research to Santa Monica's Barker Hangar on Thursday and Friday, with Tommy Hilfiger as the featured designer.

Celebrity models Marilu Henner and Brooke Burke, and Kwame Jackson and Katrina Campins from "The Apprentice" will wear H Hilfiger to open the runway show and gala sponsored by American Express.

Passport has raised almost $ 18 million for HIV-AIDS research, care, prevention and education programs since the show began as a small fashion presentation in the staff cafeteria of the Macy's Union Square flagship here. The fund-raising continues in Southern California with Passport In-Store, an all-day shopping event at the Beverly Center, South Coast Plaza, Fashion and Mission Valley and Palm Desert locations on Oct. 2. The $ 10 tickets benefit more than 70 HIV-AIDS organizations in the area.

During the San Francisco Passport event Sept. 21-23 at Fort Mason, Michael Kors was the main designer. Twenty samba dancers in plumed headdresses, pole dancers, a dozen break-dancing tots and Calvin Klein underwear model Antonio Sabato Jr. helped rev up the night.

The annual gala, founded by Elizabeth Taylor, dubbed "Evolution Revolution" this year, also featured fall collections from I.N.C. Women, Dooney & Bourke, LeVian jewelry, Versus by Versace, Kate Spade, Badgley Mischka, Vanity Fair Intimates, Nautica Sleepwear, Anna Sui and A.B.S. by Allen B. Schwartz. Other sponsors included MAC Viva Glam, Movado and Giorgio Armani.

"Everyone thinks New York is the most eclectic and creative city, but it's great to come to San Francisco to see truly eclectic styles and ideas," Kors said after the show. "I love Passport because it brings runway fashions to everyone. I had been here for the show in 1995, and when they asked me to come, I jumped at the chance. We were showing real clothes and the show also ran the gamut of emotions. It was a great night."

Kors said he was inspired by the children's wear in the runway show. "We'll do kid's wear and fashions for girls one day, I am sure," he said. "Not tomorrow, but soon. It's very exciting right now. Kids are so fashion-conscious."

An auction conducted by actor Mario Cantone of "Sex and the City," which included a peach-colored limited-edition Vespa scooter designed by Giorgio Armani, raised $ 67,000.

"Let's keep research funded, and let's keep pushing for a generation free of AIDS," said Macy's West chairman and chief executive officer Robert Mettler.

What kind of sheets and towels should I buy to impress a woman? Max T., Durham, NC Brilliant question, Max. You realize we women are obsessed with towels and bed linens (what you guys call "sheets"). The simple rules: 1. Buy 100 percent cotton. You'll pay more, but it'll feel better than blended fabric. 2. Select neutral colors: white, beige, or cream. You'll need to wash them more often, but clean sheets impress women. 3. Look for a thread count of at least 200. (Check the label on the package.) The more threads, the better. 4. We like our towels soft and fluffy, so add fabric softener to the wash. Ralph Lauren, Nautica, and Calvin Klein all make towels and sheets that women love to have against their skin.

HIGHLIGHT:

The number of triathletes in the U.S. has more than doubled in recent years, with huge growth in Hollywood. And after a summer that saw Lance Armstrong win his sixth Tour de France and Americans dominate the Olympics, all were pumped and ready for September's industry-heavy Nautica Malibu Triathlon

BODY:

Paradigm agent Scott Henderson's reaction to the news that he'll have to stay a few extra days at the Toronto Intl. Film Festival seems a little extreme. "I'm devastated," he says. "It breaks my heart." It's not that the films are crappy, or that Henderson has been downgraded to a four-star hotel, or that he's facing back-to-back days of 8 a.m. screenings. The trouble is that being in Toronto means missing the Nautica Malibu Triathlon. Henderson only started doing triathlons last year, but he's already obsessed. Besides Malibu, he's competed in the Los Angeles Triathlon and the Oceanside Half Ironman. "Once you get the bug it can be really addictive, to the point that if you go out on the weekend, you keep thinking about how you don't want to ruin your workout the next day by partying too much," he says. "It becomes, like, a big focus." Henderson is not the only one in Hollywood who is trading in premieres and cocktails - and sometimes business lunches - for a 50-mile bike ride or a two-mile swim, or both. This year's Nautica Malibu Triathlon, held on Sept. 19, felt like an industry-sponsored event. Disney, Sony, ICM, William Morris and DreamWorks all had teams and competed in what's been dubbed the Entertainment Industry Challenge (the team with the three fastest male and female times takes home the coveted Studio Cup, which this year - as in most years - went to Disney). Disney's team is the largest, boasting 160 members, including studio president/COO Bob Iger (who was on a relay team with Olympic gold-medal swimmer Amanda Beard). Besides all the industry types, there were enough celebs donning wetsuits to cast a whole season of adventure reality shows, including David Duchovny, "Two and a Half Men's" Jon Cryer, Felicity Huffman and "The O.C.'s" Tate Donovan (who placed first in the celebrity men's category for the second year in a row). What brought them all together, at dawn on a Sunday morning - coincidentally, the same day as the Emmy awards - was the chance to compete and possibly win a top spot in the standings. "It's a very competitive sport and I think people in the industry are very competitive people," Henderson says. An event is payoff for all those early morning runs and Sunday bike rides that cut into script-reading and brunch with the in-laws. A race is also an opportunity to prove your stuff, something triathletes don't take lightly. Money is poured into anything that can provide the extra edge: aerodynamic bikes, rear-wheel disks, seconds-shaving wetsuits. The investment is not always foolproof. Although Donovan won his category, he thought he'd be faster, considering that his new Cannondale bike was "awesomely tricked out with Lance Armstrong handlebars. "I thought for sure that I was going to beat my bike time (from 2003), but I was only, like, four seconds faster. It's not like I train to win the celebrity division," he adds, "though I have to tell you, it goes through my brain: I gotta be faster this year." Sometimes the competitive spirit can turn ugly. "There's a lot of shit-talking before the race," says one Malibu vet. "You'll hear people saying they're gonna kick so-and-so's ass." The celebrity relay division - in which a celeb does one leg and two non-celebs (usually ringer types, such as Beard) do the others - is particularly cutthroat. One former ringer says that when he competed for the "Gilmore Girls" team, the show's publicist "kept telling me how (a certain cast member) sucked. She was worried, because she really wanted us to do well." Celebs racing individually are equally hardcore. Donovan says he was expecting a faceoff with former "Bachelor" suitor Ryan Sutter, who beat him by 30 seconds in a Half Ironman race earlier this year. "All my teammates were like, 'Dude, that guy's gonna catch you and take the crown,' " he says. In the end, Sutter didn't show up. "I guess now that he's married, it's the ball and chain," Donovan jokes. Celebs aren't the only anxious ones. Michael Epstein, executive producer of the Nautica Malibu Triathlon, received several phone calls this year from people who wanted to change the layout of the course. "I get messages saying they want the swim longer," he says. "I guess they're good swimmers." Even people new to triathlons don't waste time getting serious. After climbing Mount Everest in 2001, ICM agent Doug MacLaren, who represents Neil Jordan and Rob Marshall, has been seeking out new conquests. An avid athlete and former Harvard crew team member, his regular regimen includes ergometer workouts, mountain biking and rock climbing. Recently he bought a road bike and signed up for Malibu. "I like things where you can't quit," he says. "It's good to have competitive sports like that. It gets hard and you keep plugging through. It's a lot like these (agency) jobs. But as an agent you can do everything right and the deal can still fall through. You don't ultimately have control. In sports, you do. What you put into it is exactly what you get out of it." As part of his preparation for Malibu, MacLaren went for a 30-mile bike ride along the Pacific Coast Highway one Sunday morning. Thirty miles is a decent distance, but it's not going to kill anyone in good shape, unless it's ridden at the speed MacLaren chose to ride. There was no warm-up, no gradual acceleration of speed. He simply got on his bike and sped ahead, clicking his gears a little too madly (it was only his third time on his new bike), hunching down a little too low, but nonetheless moving like a bullet. Fourteen miles later, when he turned around and headed back south, he was still pumping like a machine, a big grin slapped across his face. Like any number of driven workaholics in the business, MacLaren is someone who prefers to operate at one speed: fast as hell. That quality makes the link between Hollywood and triathlons a seemingly obvious one. On the other hand, the entertainment industry is traditionally most conducive to sports that involve a heavy social (i.e. networking) quotient, such as tennis and golf, or at least a sense of quirky exclusivity, such as Jerry Bruckheimer's ice hockey league. Training for a triathlon does not require membership at a tony club and usually takes place in solitude, at the unglamorous hours of 5 and 6 a.m., sometimes for up to 12-plus hours a week - hours carved out from already demanding schedules of producers, agents and execs, not to mention husbands and wives. Paradigm's Henderson says that when he decided to do the Half Ironman, he and his wife made a deal in support of his training, but, he says, "Now that I've done that, I have to scale back. We have big negotiations at our house about time." As far as using the time to network, Ironman triathlete and producer Bill Gerber ("The Dukes of Hazzard") says: "It's not like you can talk about a script while you're climbing Topanga Canyon. Your heart rate's 160. You're working. Or you're in the ocean swimming. It's not conversational." Still, Gerber does have industry buddies who double as training partners, such as producers Robert Lawrence ("The Last Castle") and Diane Sillan Isaacs ("Killing Pablo"). He says part of what draws him to the sport is that it makes him better at his job. "It's quite similar to producing, because you have to be an endurance athlete to survive independent producing these days," he says. "In this industry, especially, there are always a lot of unknowns," says Sillan Isaacs, a 43-year-old who placed fourth in her age group in the Ironman World Championships in Hawaii. "You have all these projects out there, there are a lot of intangibles. With training there's a consistency, a commitment you make to keep your mind focused. That's why I race. I like to have goals set. I like to have a pattern in my day, whereas my work is not patterned." Training can also be a much-needed diversion from the stress of the business. "I do it to get away from the industry," says Sarah Clossey, another agent at Paradigm who's completed several L.A. triathlons and marathons, and who is a training leader for Life Cycle, a seven-day charity bike race between L.A. and San Francisco. Clossey, who reps Melissa George and Camryn Manheim, trains with groups such as Shifting Gears (for biking) and the L.A. Leggers (for running), and says she enjoys the company of people who are not obsessing over deal points. Then again, the industry's always there waiting. Storyline Entertainment exec and Escape From Alcatraz Triathlon alum Travis Knox often swims at Manhattan Beach in the mornings, which means showering in an outdoor stall before work. "More than one time I've showered (there) and realized I didn't have any kind of work shoes or socks," he says. "I've shown up to morning meetings wearing flip-flops." There was also the time he sneezed a bucket of salt water into his napkin at a work breakfast following an ocean swim. The mammoth Disney triathlon team organizes weekly bike rides in Griffith Park, Zuma Beach brick workouts (where two disciplines are practiced, such as a swim followed by a run), and even picnics and bowling nights. "It's an opportunity to find camaraderie with your colleagues, doing something that you love to do, that's great for your physical well-being, as well as your mental well-being," says Adam Sanderson, senior VP of brand marketing for Disney/ABC. In some cases, working in the industry has coincidentally played a role in how Hollywood types have morphed into triathletes. Alcon Entertainment co-president Andrew Kosove was shooting the film "My Dog Skip" in Jackson, Miss., five years ago when he was involved in an "awful, bizarre accident," he says. "Someone from the neighborhood started shooting at the lights (on the set). I was shot by a .45 caliber. It hit me in my right femur, inches above my knee," he recounts. "Extensive rehab lasted well over a year. At that point I was 29, and I said, OK, rather than be a casual country club tennis player, I'd rather turn my attention to something more challenging to keep me at a very high level of fitness." Marathons, and then triathlons, met the need. On average Kosove trains two hours a day, six days a week. He competed in this year's Malibu race as training for IronMan Florida. "Obviously, there are mornings I get up and think, 'What the fuck am I doing this for?,' but in general it's an enhancement." Paradigm's Clossey was only able to dedicate herself to sports when she left the CAA mailroom. "When I was a trainee at CAA, those hours - which started at 5:45 am and went to midnight - made it impossible for me to train," she says. When she left the agency three years later to work for a TV director, she had more, though not much more, time to work out. "I have to find time early in the morning," she says. "I usually get up between 6 and 7. I'm in the office between 8 and 9. I tend to spin during the week and then do a long bike ride on Saturday or Sunday. As for running, usually three to four times a week." She practices swimming primarily on the weekends, though, she says, "I have been known to slip out if a lunch is canceled." Clossey was previously at Writers & Artists before it was bought by Paradigm in August, and says she is worried that the pressures of her new job will disrupt her regimen. "Now that I'm starting at a new company I am totally panicked about when and where to find time (to work out)," she says. Trainers are one way to cope with the demands of training, and, for novices, to figure out where to begin. Besides devising a workout program, most trainers offer diet advice and round-the-clock encouragement, via telephone and email. Some say they are as much a life and career coach as a physical trainer. Gary Kobat has coached Jim Carrey and Will Ferrell through marathons and half Ironmans, and goes so far (maybe a little too far) as to credit both actors' recent box-office strength to their offscreen training. "If you've noticed," he says, "Jim has taken off in the last two years and Will has taken off in the last two years that we've worked together." On a recent weekday morning, another trainer, Jonathan Vakneen, met producer Richard LaForge at the Santa Monica College swim center to do laps. Afterwards he met another client, music producer and TV actor Russell Howard, out on the track. Wearing orange-and-yellow Hawaiian shorts that hung past his knees, and with his shoulder-length brown hair pulled back in a rubber band, Vakneen looks more like an incredibly fit beach bum than a coach who charges $ 1,500 a day. What he delivers is "partnership," he says. This means that when his client swims, he swims. When they bike or run, he does, too. And he even travels to races and sometimes competes in them alongside his works-in-progress. And if you email him what you ate on a particular day, he'll write back and tell you: "YOU'VE BEEN HAVING DESSERTS FOR BREAKFAST AND LUNCH ...YOUR LAST MEAL MIGHT AS WELL BE TIRAMISU!" Trainers such as Riley McAlpine work more with groups than individuals. Her roster includes William H. Macy and his wife, Felicity Huffman, and "CSI: Miami's" Emily Procter. Team Riley was well represented at Malibu with six of their own relay teams, as well as spots on four entertainment industry relays. For Huffman and Jon Cryer, as well as numerous agents and TV execs, Malibu was only the first part of their day. That evening they were all decked out in their best finery for the Emmy awards, looking a little more sun-kissed than their peers, and perhaps a little elated and relieved to finally have the pain and hard work of long months of training pay off at the finish line. Yet not everyone could entirely move on from the day's capers. One agent admitted that because of her farmer's tan and the fact that she couldn't scrub off the numbers on her arm (every competitor has their bib number written in Magic Marker on their arms and legs), she was forced to wear three-quarter-inch sleeves to the awards. Furthermore, partway through the ceremony, she recalled, "I realized that part of the number was still visible on the back of my calf, so I went to the ladies' room and scrubbed it off."

It's been a long time since neckwear vendors stepped out of the box and challenged men to make a statement with their ties. But get ready, because for holiday and spring, bold paisley prints, from traditional tapestry styles to whimsical pastels, will be everywhere. They're named for Paisley, Scotland, where the pattern was first popularized, but the latest generation of this curvaceous motif is not exactly staid. They range from formal -- as in the metallic version from Sean John -- to downright fantastical, like this Pucci-esque design from Ralph Lauren Purple Label.

HEADLINE: RAP IT UP! JOHANSEN HIGH STUDENT HOPES TO 'BATTLE' HIS WAY INTO THE MUSIC INDUSTRY

BYLINE: BY ANDREW RANDHAWA, TEENS IN THE NEWSROOM

BODY:

It's lunchtime at Johansen High School, and a crowd of students surrounds a couple of guys.

Students who see the circle frantically try to get to the middle, while the others already in the front are yelling, "Ohhh!"

If you were from another high school, you would think there was a fight going on, but at Johansen, everybody knows it's one thing: a battle.

A battle is a heated contest between two "freestyle" rappers, who take turns making up lyrics to degrade the other person in various ways, or the lyrics the other person is saying.

The battle includes a beat boxer, who creates a beat for the battlers.

The winner of a battle is usually determined by the listeners, who loudly voice their approval when they think one rapper had the best comebacks or "disses" after a "freestyle."

In the middle of every battle is Johansen senior Danial Diaz, aka EmceeGetJiggy.

Danial doesn't fit the typical rapper image. He's white, he doesn't wear baggy pants and his boxer shorts aren't exposed.

Danial, 16, has spiky hair. He wears almost anything from Gap to Nautica and occasionally presents himself with the popular Abercrombie style. He's known at "Joho" for his "ill" (awesome) freestyling and his upbeat personality.

Even in the heat of "battle," Danial's gibes are good-natured. In one recent confrontation, he fired off these "freestyle" lyrics:

"Battling Jiggy, you're going to need more than just luck.

"Look at this cat -- he just took his senior pictures in front of a taco truck ..."

Danial started entertaining students (the ones he wasn't torturing in his battles) at the beginning of his sophomore year. That was when he realized that his ambition of becoming a rapper might one day come true.

Danial has had a fascination with music since he was 2 years old. He started rapping when he was 9.

He grew up listening to his favorite musician, Michael Jackson, and as the years progressed, he became influenced by other artists, such as Dr. Dre, Kanye West, Baby Face, Freestyle Fellowship and Jurassic 5.

As a kid, Danial used a notebook to write down lyrics that came to him. It was something that kept his imagination working and gave him something to do in his free time. "At first, I thought it was the cool thing to do, but then I realized that writing was something close to my heart, and eventually became a part of me," he said.

His first song was titled "The Funk."

"I wanted to bring out the old-school funk, while at the same time maintaining the new-style beats," he said.

In the summer of Danial's sophomore year, he and his father, Dan, built a state-of-the-art studio in his garage, to help Danial along with his desire to become a professional musician. "You can find all the pro equipment required to create an album inside the studio," Danial said.

The studio has black foam soundproofing lining the walls, making it impossible to hear anything outside.

This was the steppingstone for Danial. Things started to seriously develop for the young entertainer after this.

Last year, Danial was able to perform at Johansen's rallies, where he thrilled the student body with his hip-hop music and skilled dance moves.

"At first, I was overwhelmed by all the people in the stands, but when they handed me the mike, something beyond my control took over, and from there, I just started to do my thing," he recalled.

Before he knew it, the students were all on their feet, dancing to the beat.

"Danial is one unbelievable dude. He has the potential to be something great. He's got mad skills," said Johansen senior Jack Scott, a student activities commissioner.

Senior Shaun Joseph, another activities commissioner who helps Scott plan school rallies, added, "Danial's singing and dancing at last year's rally was awesome."

Weeks after the rally, Danial met junior Nico Nieves. The two had heard about each other at school.

Danial listened to Nico and was impressed by his smooth R&B vocals. So EmceeGetJiggy and Nico worked on an album all summer.

The result, titled "It's ... the Takeover," is due out in mid-October and will feature songs that range from hip-hop/R&B to the popular punk-rock genre.

Johansen senior Leejay Rivera, aka "Etakit the Egg Head," and junior drummer Jordan Coenan have been working with Danial for a while and will be featured on the album as well.

Besides producing records, Danial has put together a number of dance mix tapes for his varsity basketball team and for the Johansen and Beyer cheerleading squads.

He always wanted a name with MC in it, but he wanted to think of something that wasn't the typical MC name. He thought about his dance moves, and how he considered himself to get jiggy. That's how EmceeGetJiggy was formed. When questioned about his unique name, Diaz responded, "Having a stupid name and the fact that I'm white gives me the edge when it comes to kicking a freestyle or battling."

Though Danial's artistic future looks promising, he is determined to stay true to his family's values. "My parents encourage my passion for music, but they don't want it to be the main concern of my life right now," he said. "They, as I, believe that education should come first, no matter what."

He plans to go to college after high school and will continue to produce music on the side.

"I'm not too concerned about making it right now," Danial said. "I'm just enjoying making music and entertaining everybody who listens, because that's what it is all about."

Andrew Randhawa, 17, is a senior at Johansen High School and is a member of The Bee's Teens in the Newsroom journalism program.

JERSEY GARDENS MALL [tilde] ELIZABETH

Shop for miles

Huge Jersey Gardens offers abundance of consumer glee

By CHRISTA SEGALINI

Staff Writer

Jersey Gardens in Elizabeth, the state's largest outlet mall, is a shop-a-holic's dream.

The complex houses more than 200 big-name and specialty stores, such as Nautica, Ann Taylor Factory Store, Nine West, Faberware, Games Workshop and a whole slew of others that cater to every type of person with every type of need. Most of the stores are outlets or chain warehouses, so merchandise is significantly discounted. Unlike other outlet malls, Jersey Gardens' stores aren't discounted because their merchandise is dated and out of style. At Jersey Gardens, you don't have to trade quality for value.

Jersey Gardens Mall is quite large, with stores that specialize in clothing, accessories, games, home furnishings, kitchenware, entertainment, food, beauty and nutritional products, gifts and much more. I visited four of the stores: Windsor, Haggard Clothing Co., Period Furniture and Mikasa. Windsor, a national clothing and accessory store based out of Vernon, Calif., has its only Jersey location at Jersey Gardens Mall. The store carries merchandise geared toward young and chic modern women, with an emphasis on femininity and flare.

Special-occasion dresses decked out in chiffon, beads, lace, and coming in every color of the rainbow are found next to tweed suit jackets, leather handbags and the latest in work attire for today's young woman. Out-on-the-town clothes, such as embroidered tanks and halter tops, fitted jeans and poncho sweaters, are not lacking either. For every event in a young woman's life, Windsor seems to have the clothing to fit the occasion.

Mikasa, a leading manufacturer and distributor of tabletop products, has a store location in Jersey Gardens as well. The store specializes in dinette sets in fine china, bone china and stoneware, in addition to crystal stemware, utensil sets and all the items needed to complete your entertaining and everyday use tabletop.

Also, Mikasa comes out with season-themed tabletop accessories, such as Halloween candles, gravy boats and salt and pepper shakers and Christmas serving trays, figurines and candle holders. All remain true to the store's high standards.

Having a party? You're going to need that cocktail set you always said you were going to buy. Mikasa has it, along with fondue sets, bottle openers and stoppers and an assortment of picture frames, candle holders, lamps, clocks and other decorative houseware items that can help make your entire home fit for company.

Period Furniture has its only store location in Jersey Gardens. The antique reproduction store, based out of Passaic, specializes in replications of antique furniture, including a number of side tables, chairs, chests and bedroom and dining room sets. The furniture is made mostly out of wood, with some marble or glass tops and 24-karat gold plating. The store's unique taste is reminiscent of an era when the phrase "high fashion" could be used to describe more than just the latest clothing line. Crystal chandeliers and original oil paintings also are sold at Period Furniture. They accent the decorative side of the store's furniture line.

Haggar Clothing Co. offers men a full range of clothing options, from casual khakis to custom fitted suits, at up to 75 percent off department store prices. The style is classic but comfortable. Items include polo short-sleeved cotton shirts, fleece-lined fall jackets, long-sleeved woven shirts, contemporary ties, dress pants, silk shirts, wool and leather blazers. All are made for the mature man looking for quality and fashionable clothing at bargain prices.

Haggar also offers a few lines of clothing, such as Forever New shirts, dress pants and khakis, Freedom khakis and a full line of Comfort Equipped dress pants and khakis that have a hidden, expandable waistband.

Jersey Gardens is the one-stop shopping experience that merges the convenience of mall shopping with the quality of boutique shopping. Be sure to bring your walking shoes because the mall is remarkably large. You're bound to spend the entire day finding everything you're looking for.

Bargain for under $50

Bargain for under $50: Haggar Clothing Co.'s corduroy fleeced-lined jackets are a must-have for fall. Haggar's offers them for only $18.88, so you can afford to get more than one color.

BYLINE: The Canadian Press

DATELINE: TORONTO

BODY:

TORONTO - When a woman goes into a change room and tries on a pair of jeans, research shows, the first thing she does is turn around and look at the view from behind.

You could say VF Corp., the world's largest apparel maker, is doing the same thing.

In a bid to recapture a greater share of the highly fragmented jeans market, the parent company of Lee jeans has gone back to its past -- way back -- to come up with an icon it hopes will resonate with young consumers.

Meet Buddy Lee, an impish looking -- or in some people's eyes disturbing looking -- redheaded boy doll dressed in a plaid shirt and jeans.

Buddy Lee was created in the 1920s as a model for Lee clothing. Now, he's on posters and transit shelters all over the Greater Toronto Area, Montreal, Calgary and Vancouver as VF Corp. brings the Lee jeans brand back to Canada for the first time in six years.

"We wanted an icon to represent the brand's heritage," said Brian Williams, vice-president of VF Canada, noting the Lee Jeans company is 110 years old, only 20 years younger than the granddaddy of all jeans, Levi Strauss & Co.

Founded by Henry David Lee, the orphaned son of Canadian-born tailor Michael Lee, the company was the first and only company to use dolls to make sales presentations.

"We bought a lot of them back on EBay from people who kept them," Mr. Williams says.

A focus group made up of the target market, young people aged 15 to 24, chose Buddy from among a roomful of memorabilia at the Lee Jeans headquarters in Merriam, Kansas, Mr. Williams said.

The company had a collection of original Buddy Lee dolls in the kind of gear it sold back then, including uniforms for milk deliverymen, train engineers and cowboys. Jeans hadn't yet become the anti-fashion statement of a generation that came of age in the '60s.

Buddy Lee has been relaunched in the United States on late-night cable television. The company says Canadian kids discovered him there and went on the Internet looking for more information.

"There's a little bit of a mystique to him for kids who don't know about him," Mr. Williams explained.

Though not well-known in Canada, the character could work here if consumers see it as a point of differentiation for the brand, said marketing expert Alan Middleton.

Like cars, jeans are sold mainly on the basis of the image they project, said Mr. Middleton, who teaches at York University's Schulich School of Business. Companies such as Guess and Calvin Klein have emphasized their jeans' sex appeal, he noted. Others, such as Levi Strauss, have worked on creating legends about themselves, "as in we're the original jeans maker from the (San Francisco) gold-rush days," he said.

Buddy Lee could help to sell more Lee jeans if consumers come to associate his image with quality, authenticity and heritage, Mr. Middleton said.

The need for a unique and memorable image has rarely been more urgent as a profusion of brands competes for a greater share of the resurgent denim business.

Though sales of jeans still trail the peaks reached in the mid-'90s, they're starting to recover after years in the doldrums when khakis were king.

Driven by new finishes and stretch fabrics, along with the low-rise waist, Canadian sales have jumped 18 per cent in the past three years to $1 billion Cdn., according to data supplied by market research firm NPD Group Canada.

In the 12 months to July this year, 34 million pairs of jeans were purchased in Canada, up 26 per cent from the same period in 2001. The average price was about $30.

"Sales of jeans peaked when khakis took over," said David Howell, an NPD consultant. "By 2001 the volume of khakis sold in Canada nearly matched jeans. But then low-rise came in and jeans took off again."

Among Canadians, Levi Strauss remains the top selling men's jeans brand, followed by Lee's Wrangler brand. But among women, Levi ranks second behind the Gap's in-house brand, while Lee runs a distant 16th, well behind the lower-priced, in-house brands sold at Wal-Mart and Sears, and the pricier designer names such as Calvin Klein.

VF Canada is clearly aiming to close some of those gaps with its new icon and four new Lee-branded jeans: Lee Dungarees, Buddy Lee Registered, Lee 1889, and One True Fit.

The marketing campaign is only part of the company's strategy for improving its sales. VF has also been expanding through acquisitions, adding Jantzen swimwear, skateboarding shoemakers Vans Inc., and in the jeans category the higher end Nautica brand.

The publicly traded company's share price is up 25 per cent, year over year.

The Lee jeans division is also spending more on consumer research, including how women behave in the dressing room, said Kathy Collins, vice-president of marketing for Lee Jeans. After the view from behind, most women want to see how the jeans look on their thighs, the company's research shows. Whether the pants feel comfortable is well down most women's list, she adds. For men, it's the top priority.

With the help of Buddy Lee, Mr. Williams predicts, "Lee could be a $50-million brand in Canada within five years."

IF you want to know all about the United States, don't miss the Experience US promotion at the One Utama Shopping Centre in Bandar Utama, Petaling Jaya tomorrow and Sunday.

The event is organised by the Commercial Service of the US embassy. It is aimed at promoting US fashion, tourism and education to Malaysians through a series of shows and interactive games.

There will be fashion shows by Guess, CK Jeans, Nautica, Kenneth Cole and Polo Ralph Lauren.

Other participants include American Airlines, Cathay Pacific, Reliance Travel and Tour, Golden Tourworld Travel, Royal Caribbean Cruises, Northwood University and the Malaysian-American Commission of Educational Exchange (Macee) which will provide prospective students and travellers to the US with much-needed information.

The highlight will be the display of Chevrolet cars.

"Visitors will be able to test-drive the cars," said Norzahid Mohd Zahudi, chief executive officer of Hicomobil Sdn Bhd, the main sponsor of the event.

Other sponsors include One Utama, American Express, Starbucks and Clinique.

According to William Zarit, commercial counsellor of the US embassy, this is the Commercial Service's first promotional event at a local shopping mall.

"International travel and tourism are the United States' largest service export industry. Although travel to the US has been significantly affected by Sept 11, the Travel Industry Association of America and other US organisations are confident that more streamlined procedures for visa applications will help improve the situation," said Zarit.

He was speaking at a recent Press conference at the shopping centre. Present were Norzahid, One Utama director Datuk Teo Chiang Kok and Sanjay Chinchwade, director of marketing and business development, American Express.

"The same goes for education. After Sept 11, there was a significant decline in the number of Malaysian students to the US.

"However, the trend is changing and the US is regaining its popularity as a destination offering quality education," said Zarit, adding that business administration, information technology and engineering were the most popular courses pursued by Malaysians there.

Visitors who buy travel packages worth RM1,000 and above or those who purchase apparel worth RM250 or more from participating brands during the promotion will receive a free gift and be eligible for a free round trip air ticket to the US.

Experience US is on from 10am to 9pm.

This city, where baseball and politics are the community passions, really does feel like the "Hub of the Universe" this weekend.

In addition to Games 1 and 2 of the World Series, Bostonians are reveling in a rich menu of sporting delights.

The white tents are erected along the Charles River for the 40th Head of the Charles Regatta. About 300,000 spectators were expected to line the banks of a twisting three-mile course from the Boston University boathouse upstream to Brighton.

The regatta offers 7,000 rowers in 1,500 shells, free concerts and free boxer shorts. Nautica Jeans, the sponsor of Row-a-palooza, is giving away 6,000 boxers to spectators.

The nation's Irish Catholic capital also turned TV sets to the Boston College-Notre Dame football game in South Bend, Ind., on Saturday.

Today, the unbeaten Patriots take on the undefeated New York Jets in Foxboro.

And there are rumors that hometown boy John Kerry, the Democratic candidate for president, might make an appearance at Fenway Park.

For all of the excitement, consider the plight of the city's Major League Soccer team. The Revolution had a first-round playoff game against the Columbus Crew at Gillette Stadium in Foxboro. The game started at 7:30 p.m. Saturday, opposite the regional religion, the Red Sox and their Game 1 encounter with the St. Louis Cardinals. -- Brian Meehan

ATLANTIC CITY has long been the overdressed platinum blonde of Jersey Shore resorts, much like her darling Miss America pageant. There are days she looks radiant, with an electric smile and a gentle wave. But sometimes there is a day of washout. Then, the mascara runs and the high hair frizzes.

Such a day came last Wednesday, when ABC announced that it would no longer broadcast the Miss America pageant. For the first time in 50 years, Miss America was left without a suitor from network television, giving rise to the thought that this might be the death knell for Atlantic City's longest-running attraction.

The pageant has become a dainty dinosaur, a leggy curiosity from the era of "The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet" and Hula Hoops. In a pop-cultural moment defined by extreme makeovers and instant pornography on the Internet, the idea of young women swaddled in callow idealism and clad in bathing suits as they sashay for the cameras suffers from terminal quaintness. Even the Miss America Organization admitted that it wasn't surprised that ABC dropped the show.

Still, what kind of tremors does ABC's decision create for a city whose identity has been so strongly tied to the pageant? Then there's the strike of several weeks' duration by casino workers and the continuing financial worries of the resort's most prominent figure, Donald J. Trump (talk about a riveting reality show).

So, the Miss America news was hardly a boon to public relations for Atlantic City. Yet local business owners, and the Miss America Organization itself, are trying to put the best face on the run of bad news.

"Every destination, urban or resort, that has tourism has any number of issues at any given time," said Cathleen Kiernan, vice president of communications for Smith O'Keefe and Associates, an Egg Harbor Township marketing firm that has many clients in and around Atlantic City. "Certain folks will have financial problems, and there will be labor issues, and things like Miss America will go through changes.

"But all the casinos are open and right now, none of this is affecting the Atlantic City market."

For its part, the Miss America Organization said it has no thoughts of moving out of Atlantic City, as was threatened several years ago. "We're based in Atlantic City, and we have been for 84 years; we don't see that changing," said Jenni Glenn, a Miss America Organization spokeswoman. Ms. Glenn said the ABC announcement was somewhat expected. "Creatively, the association with ABC had run its course. We even encouraged a parting of the ways this summer. We have been with all the networks, and all that time we have been in Atlantic City."

Ms. Glenn said talks are under way to find another television partner. The pageant derives several million dollars a year from its television production, but ratings have been sinking, about 10 percent a year over the last five years.

The Atlantic City Convention and Visitors Authority contributed $678,000 toward last September's TV production and in return got to produce a three-minute spot promoting Atlantic City. "We do in-kind things for the pageant as well, but we're not viewing this as a big negative," said Susan Ricciardi of the authority. "The landscape of TV has changed from the 1950's and 1960's. Perhaps that means that there will be a niche audience for Miss America, but that won't hurt the city.

"You see, normally we get people from a 300-mile radius, but during that two weeks during the pageant, it changes radically. Each time Miss Ohio's aunt or Miss Iowa's uncle comes here for a week and we can show them the good things about Atlantic City, that only enhances our profile. I believe Miss America will still be around for a long time, even without ABC."

Michael Pollock, publisher of the Pleasantville-based Gaming Industry Observer, said the run of bad news, including the Miss America announcement, should have little effect on the otherwise good run the casino industry in town is having.

"If anything, the prevailing view out of Atlantic City is optimism," Mr. Pollock said. "Even the strike is being fought over issues concerning future growth in Atlantic City, of how everyone can profit from it. From the perspective of the people down here, the good news is in terms of projects under way and those that are likely to be built. True, you look at the papers and you see bad news. But the casino revenue numbers have been growing and I don't get a sense of pessimism, even with the strike, and certainly not with Miss America."

Certainly there has been a boom in high-end retail stores and fancy restaurants in the last year. The Walk, a new upscale outlet mall, has 40 of its 52 stores open, with upper-crust places like Tommy Hilfiger, Coach, Guess, and Nautica among them. The former Ocean One mall on the Boardwalk is being redone and will eventually be even more upscale, with stores like Gucci and Ferragamo. Where there were once vacant storefronts on the Boardwalk, there are now sophisticated national chains like Starbucks and Rainforest Cafe.

"If national retailers and these kinds of food and beverage places are coming in," Ms. Kiernan said, "we can't let some minor setbacks get in the way."

Ms. Ricciardi of the Convention and Visitors Authority said one telling thing is that the four-day weekend of Nov. 4-7 is not being affected by any bad news. It is the time of the New Jersey teachers' convention and, she said, every room in town is booked.

While the military look is always in style at AAFES, one might not guess that a recent best-selling SKU was a set of men's burgundy silk pajamas. Knowing that this rather posh after-hours item would be a winner is Jim Moon's job. He serves as gmm and vp of apparel at AAFES, running the company's extensive assortment of men's, women's and children's wear, footwear, jewelry and handbags, as well as cosmetics and fragrances.

"We're basically really a cross between a department store and a discounter," said Moon, noting that his customers range from pay grades of an E1 to an O6, from private to officer, giving him a broad range of budgets, age demographics and tastes to cater to.

In total, apparel is one of the most important merchandise categories at AAFES. Of the company's $ 7.8 billion in annual revenues during fiscal 2003, about $ 802 million came from clothing and footwear. Of this figure, men's, as would be expected, brought in about $ 283 million, while women's brought in about $ 237 million. About $ 130 million came from children's wear, including infant and toddler apparel. Not including combat boots--though military attire is available through AAFE--footwear brought in $ 152 million.

Another category that is extremely important to Moon's bottom line is jewelry. Both fashion and fine jewelry are key. While fashion or costume jewelry earns about $ 17 million per year, fine jewelry far outshines this number at $ 103 million. While regulations forbid AAFES to sell diamond solitaires larger than a carat except overseas, Moon notes that the engagement ring business is booming. Cluster rings of more than a carat, as well as diamond anniversary and wedding bands are also popular. Designer watches from houses including Gucci are also bestsellers, while Seiko and Timex also retain an audience.

While khakis and camouflage may be the first looks that come to mind when considering our men and women in uniform, Moon pointed out that fashion is actually essential to marketable assortments.

"It is important that we stay very close to trends: our customer range goes from age zero to 100, including numerous retirees, and it is very important to show that we are up to date with the latest trends with the brands that are popular in the market," noted Moon. He added that the percentage of certain brands is higher at bases that have a higher demand for certain styles due to age demographics.

After all, the military is full of young customers, in some cases fresh out of high school, who want to purchase juniors brands like Mudd and I.e.i. and young men's labels, including Sean Jean and Tommy Hilfiger. In fact, AAFES successfully retails all of these brands, along with department store labels, including DKNY, Nautica and Ralph Lauren's Chaps and Polo labels. National brands comprise about 79% of assortments.

Prestige national brands are especially crucial during holiday, which spurs not only fine jewelry and watch sales but sales of some high-end handbag labels as well, including Coach and Dooney and Bourke handbags.

However AAFES also represents current fashion designs in the 21% remainder of its assortment. To meet demand for urban styles at affordable prices, the company recently introduced a juniors and young men's casual line with a hip military-inspired name: Decoded. The brand is already one of the company's best sellers, aimed at a demographic between the ages of 18 and 23.

Another private label initiative is ID Tags, a children's brand for size 7-14 girls and 7-16 boys. The fittingly named New Recruits line offers maternity and infant wear.

All three of these new private brands are already in stores and performing up to code, according to Moon.

"I think that one of the biggest changes is that the market is not as brand driven as it has been in the past and more accepting of the private label merchandise. I think that has been the biggest surprise in retail. My sell-throughs are at 75% for the Decoded brand right now; merchandise is flying right out the door. My customer has accepted this brand; it's great looking merchandise, good looking, a good fit and the best quality we can offer for the price, from $ 7.99 to $ 29.99."

While active military personnel are generally physically fit, and adult women will purchase juniors jeans in many cases, Moon noted that, "we do sell a good bit of plus size apparel, both in our Passports private label in tops and bottoms and in national brands like Lee." The company is not, however in the husky boys business or the men's big and tall business in its private label.

Since mid-tier and mass retailers typically line the highway on the way into a base, Moon is careful to provide the right balance of brands and merchandise.

"We don't carry Wrangler, but we have Levi's Red Tab, our top men's denim brand, and in women's, while Mudd and I.e.i. sell best in juniors, we have Levi's in ladies' sizes as well."

Whether branded or private label, Moon summed up his strategy in that, "My customer in the U.S. is going to shop in Wal-Mart and Target--they are my competition. My goal is to provide the best quality product at the best price."

Financing for regatta floundering

BODY:

Unless the Head of the Charles Regatta finds increased sponsorship money, the future of the 40-year-old event is in doubt, according to Frederick V. Schoch, who has directed the event since 1991.

``It is difficult to do the things you want to do for the competitors and the spectators without having that large sponsor at the top of the pyramid," Schoch said, alluding to the loss of Charles Schwab as presenting sponsor after 2001. ``For the last several years, we've had to cut amenities and reduce our budget and watch it very carefully.

``Last year, we had to sustain a major loss and had to tap our endowment, and this year we will lose again, but not as dramatically," Schoch said.

``(Schwab) were probably investing close to $300,000, which was what they were paying us, and probably another $200,000 in promotion," said Schoch about the financial firm. ``Absolutely, we're in danger if we go another year and sustain a loss, because our endowment just isn't that big to begin with."

This year's regatta, which had Nautica Competition as official sponsor, drew 80,000 spectators Saturday and over 100,000 yesterday. A total of 7,043 rowers competed.

Perilous journey

The women's lightweight eight entrant from Ottawa Rowing Club experienced arguably the roughest trip upriver yesterday. The craft missed 14 buoys, bumped into a dock adjacent to Cambridge Boat Club, and was assessed 2 minutes and 50 seconds in penalty time. It finished in 18:27.892.

``We took the course really tight and went off into a buoy," said Tara Stockwell, the boat's 21-year-old coxswain. ``I didn't call off the pressure on the starboard (side) in time. It wasn't the wind."

Oldies but goodies

Richard Kendall, 74, is no stranger to Head of the Charles victory hardware. Kendall, who had won four consecutive senior veteran titles (over 70) and one veteran title (over 60), made it six straight with his 15:41.675 finish yesterday.

``I'm trying to keep up with Lance Armstrong," quipped Kendall, who competes for South Niagara Rowing Club in Ridgeway, Ontario.

Kendall's wife, Deborah Greitzer, is a violinist with the Buffalo Philharmonic. ``She likes to say that she imported me to Canada as a rare antique," he said.

In other action, Dennis Ruane, 50, of Pelham, N.H., and the Riverside Boat Club outlasted the competition in the grand masters division, rowing the course in 14:56.213. Ruane, a member of the U.S. national four team in 1981, usually does his rowing on the Concord River.

FASHION INDUSTRY: Sector eyes role as trend-setter

Textile chief urges one-stop shop for global players

Thailand's textile industry must undertake two key strategies to cope with the stringent competition that is expected to follow the scrapping of global textile export quotas at the end of the year, the president of the Thai Textile Manufacturers Association said yesterday.

Phongsak Assakul said the industry must provide a one-stop service and become a trend-setter to boost competitiveness in local and export markets.

We should respond quickly to customer demand by undertaking those key strategies to ensure our competitiveness, Phongsak said.

In an interview with The Nation, Phongsak said leading international sportswear brands such as Nike, Puma and Nautica needed a one-stop service from Thai exporters.

Under the strategy, Thailand would offer a package of services starting with raw-material sourcing, and including designing, shipping at certain dates and quoting at certain prices as required by customers.

In addition, fashion designs should look one step ahead or one season ahead to convince buyers about Thailand's manufacturing efficiency and design ability.

Thai manufacturers should play a pro-active role by offering fashion designs ahead of China. If we can achieve that, Thailand can offer fashion trends two years ahead of China, he said.

The role of regional trend-setter is also an important strategy that the country should focus on, Phongsak said.

Regional brands will eventually be developed by Thailand, he said.

Textile liberalisation next year will give buyers more bargaining power. The marketing strategy of the world's fashion brands will change to see them displaying new designs more frequently with more collections, he said.

For instance, the Spanish-based Sara fashion brand increases its collection from 14 to 20 sets every two weeks.

You can see newly-arrived designs almost every time you visit a Sara shop, he said. Sara has 200 designers travelling around the world to survey the market and produce designs in Spain.

Other brand names like Mango and H&M do have the same business culture as Sara. As a result, Thai exporters should meet directly with customers to let them know exactly what Thais can offer them. This will be the way to create business next year, he said.

To cope with the changing environment, Phongsak said cluster manufacturing could be used to match business alliances or synergy partners to encourage manufacturing.

He also said that a supply chain strategy has to be created to be a key support for the one-stop service concept.

MLB WANTS TO MAKE SURE FANS GET THE REAL DEAL PROGRAM AIMS TO STOP FAKE MEMORABILIA The Boston Globe October 28, 2004, Thursday

PROGRAM AIMS TO STOP FAKE MEMORABILIA

BYLINE: By Naomi Aoki, Globe Staff

BODY:

Deloitte & Touche accountant Cory Boss spent Game 3 of the World Series, collecting a couple dozen balls used in the game, four bases, a commemorative home plate and pitching rubber used for the first pitch, and both the Red Sox and Cardinals line-up cards signed by the team managers.

Before returning the items to Major League Baseball, Boss and two other Deloitte accountants attached holographic stickers bearing unique identification numbers to the collectibles to authenticate them as the real deal. They went to the players' clubhouses during the game to label the special World Series nameplates on the lockers.

"Who said being a CPA was boring?" said Boss, 27, who works in the accounting firm's St. Louis office. He doesn't get paid extra for the task, he said, but "it's certainly a desirable assignment."

Boss is one of about 150 Deloitte & Touche accountants nationwide trained to authenticate official baseball memorabilia at major league games and private signing sessions. There are one to three of them at any given game, putting stickers on everything from game balls to champagne bottles the Red Sox would use to celebrate a historic World Series win. They go to players' homes to witness and authenticate the signing of bats, pictures and gloves.

Deloitte says the program is in the interest of players, fans and major league baseball. Fans spent $2.7 billion in 2002 on licensed baseball merchandise, according to a report by Sporting Goods Manufacturers Association. That's more than they spent on National Football League or National Basketball Association licensed merchandise. Add in signed memorabilia sold at trade shows or on online auction sites like eBay and the tally climbs even higher.

The problem for baseball is that a good deal of the items are fake so much so that the Federal Bureau of Investigation launched Operation Bullpen in the 1990s to investigate forged sports merchandise. The FBI concluded that 75 percent of autographs out there were fake.

So the league decided to take action. Fans were reluctant to pay hundreds, even thousands, of dollars for collectibles they couldn't confirm were genuine.

"Fans were losing trust in baseball," said Colin Hagen, MLB's vice president of licensing.

In 1993, the league began putting holographic stickers on hats, T-shirts and other merchandise sold in the postseason. In 1999, it expanded the program to all official league merchandise.

Then, in 2001, the league teamed up with accounting firm Arthur Andersen in a separate effort to authenticate balls, bats, bases, and collectibles autographed at private signings. Deloitte & Touche took over the task two years ago. Since the program began, more than 600,000 signed and game items have been logged into a database fans can use to verify their authenticity, said Hagen.

Given the buying frenzy among Red Sox fans right now, the league is particularly vigilant about counterfeit activity. The hotter something is the more likely it is to be counterfeit. And Red Sox paraphernalia has never been hotter.

A perennial favorite of fans, Red Sox merchandise is flying off shelves these days. Fans are converging on the Souvenir Store on Yawkee Way in droves. Knit tocque hats, the locker room caps, and some Sox vs. Cardinals designs are sold out.

Sales at the store on Saturday and Sunday were four times bigger than any other single day this year, said Steve D'Angelo, vice president of Twins Enterprise Inc., which owns the Souvenir Shop and is a licensed maker of MLB hats. D'Angelo said retailers are ordering Red Sox gear at nearly five times the rate they're ordering Cardinals merchandise.

Rick Becker, vice president of sales and marketing at VF Corp., another major league licensee and the maker of brands such as Nautica, North Face and Wrangler, said the demand for playoff and World Series merchandise this year is twice as big as it was during the Subway Series when the Yankees faced the Mets.

"This only happens once every 86 years," said Fred Vona, who plunked down $450 for three Red Sox jerseys bearing the World Series patch one for his daughter, his wife and him. "You have to go with the best to break the curse."

And to be the best, it has to be authentic, Vona said.

Wearing a 1918 World Champs Red Sox hat with the holographic sticker on the lid, collector and fan Philip Dunlavey couldn't agree more. Whether it's merchandise or a signed ball, Dunlavey wants to know it's the real thing.

He's got balls signed by baseball greats Ted Williams, Mickey Mantle and Joe DiMaggio. If he decides to sell them, he'll have to prove their authenticity. Today's memorabilia will be easier to track, he said, and that stamp of authenticity is valuable on the open market.

"I tell my daughter that's her college education," he said.

New York — Nautica has doubled its bath offerings in its branded line with 10 new fully coordinated patterns featuring bath accessories and towels — now more of a concentration at the company.

A new merchandising strategy that ties back to collection beds is now in place along with more fabric-driven shower curtains and more traditional looks.

"We really invested in the bath category and wanted to show a broader range of offerings and fabrications," said Piera Onorati, Nautica's senior director-retail development.

Meanwhile, through its Welspun licensee, Nautica is merchandising brightly colored solid Crew Classics towels with jacquards in stripes and florals to coordinate back to collection beds or stand on their own. The Crew Classics towel wall is set up in color families that complement bedding. Crew Classics, which are solids with a double windowpane dobby, are priced at $9.99 on 30-by-56 bath towels in 18 colors in soft twist cotton with hollow yarns. Two coordinated jacquards in four colors retail for $12.99.

Also, a new design director for bath, Blair Tate, was hired by Welspun USA this past summer. Prior to working at Welspun USA, Tate worked at WestPoint Stevens for 12 years, most recently as bath design manager.

Through its partnership with Zorlu, Nautica will be offering an Oxford sheeting program in six fashion brights featuring the Nautica J-Class embroidered sailboat logo. This pinpoint oxford weave program will be sold as sheet sets for $59.99 queen. There is also a 450-count Stateroom Sateen Stripe sheet in six muted tones and a flannel program in duvets and sheet sets with yarn-dye stripes, buffalo check plaids and two-tone twill weave solids.

They are things of beauty made by some of the world's top fashion houses, including Calvin Klein, Donna Karan and Armani. And it does not take 20/20 vision to see that they are not about to go out of style any time soon in Hong Kong.

A greater percentage of people here wear spectacles than almost anywhere else in the world. The territory has one of the highest rates of myopia, and experts have found the situation is worsening generation by generation.

By the time they reach the age of seven, more than 10 per cent of Hong Kong children suffer from myopia or short-sightedness, and that figure climbs steeply to 55 per cent by the age of 12 and a staggering 70 per cent at 17.

Young people in Hong Kong are twice as likely as their parents to need glasses by the time they reach the end of their teenage years, and projections by health experts see no prospect of the trend slowing down.

According to the Centre for Myopia Research at the Hong Kong Polytechnic University, there is a "huge difference" in the prevalence of myopia in the younger generation compared to the older generation in Hong Kong, and environmental influences are to blame.

Experts believe the key triggers for the deteriorating eyesight of younger people are Hong Kong's famously long office hours and a tendency for more and more "intensive close work".

It is a prognosis with which Jessica Lau, marketing manager for Marchon Asia -Pacific, which distributes designer glasses to shops across the city, agrees.

"Hong Kong people do wear glasses more than people in western countries," she said.

"In Hong Kong, people work too hard and they are sitting in front of a computer for a long time, and even young children have eye problems."

The combination of a high rate of short-sightedness and a strong concentration of sufferers among the young means Hong Kong spectacle wearers have an unusually high degree of preference for designer frames.

"They like to follow the trends in terms," Ms Lau said. "They follow the fashions from Japan, and western countries and Europe when they buy their glasses."

Like the rest of the fashion world, sales are dictated by seasons and designer names. Marchon is currently stocking chains such as the Optical Shop and the Optical Centre with the autumn and winter collections from Calvin Klein, Donna Karan, Nautica and Nike.

A good pair of designer frames costs between $ 1,000 and $ 1,800, while some, such as Donna Karan with their "retro yet modern" styling, cost $ 2,000 and above.

Lines being brought to Hong Kong by Marchon this season include a range of "Vintage Titanium" Nautica glasses that combine lightweight durability and classic styling, and a Nike eight-strong Flexon Optical range which, in typical Nike-style, claims to offer "functionality for the zealous individual".

The peak season, however, is spring when fashion-conscious spectacle wearers, on top of the usual everyday glasses, start hunting for designer sunglasses to see them through the summer months in style.

Designs sold in Hong Kong - where Ms Lau said buyers are relatively conservative and tend to opt for conventional and practical styles - are predominantly American and European, but the glasses themselves are modified to fit the Asian face, particularly in the nose bridge.

At first glance, the market for designer frames in Hong Kong would appear to be one that has nothing but a dazzling upside.

There are, however, two potential long-term handicaps to growth in the market: laser treatment and disposable contact lenses.

Disposable lenses are especially popular with women who do not want to wear glasses, said Ms Lau, while more people are opting for corrective laser treatment, now that prices are coming down and safety fears are easing.

As always, it is fashion that dictates the trends - and as more celebrities get the laser treatment, its popularity will grow.

Singer Elton John has already done it. Given time, younger, more appealing trend-setters are sure to follow suit.

GRAPHIC: Nautica glasses (above left and right) in classic styling, while Calvin Klein eyewear (above) is the latest for autumn and winter.

"The Walk" on a sun-dappled autumn afternoon doesn't look or feel like Atlantic City. The plethora of mid-to high-end stores on Michigan Avenue offers a welcome reprieve from the lights and buzz of the nearby casinos.

But does New Jersey really need another strip of shops?

Well, Atlantic City and the new stores are perfect together.

The shops, the first of which opened in August, are between the Convention Center and the boardwalk.

"It makes me feel better to come home with some things from here as opposed to nothing," Susan Blake, 53, of Montclair said after shopping at Liz Claiborne. "It's also a nice change from the casinos. It's nice to do more than gamble and eat down here. It makes it more interesting in Atlantic City."

"The Walk" is part of AC's plan to become more than a gambling mecca.

The town would love to become a destination that couples and families visit for an extended period. The first quarter century of casino gambling, which began in 1978, attracted a great deal of folks who would drive to AC for the day or an overnight. But that was the pre-Borgata era. The Las Vegas-style hotel opened during summer 2003, and the hotel-casino-spa has been attracting a younger demographic, which is inclined to stay for an extended period.

"We have a great number of guests who come down for quite a few nights or a week," Borgata marketing director Michael Facenda said. "We have people come down here for the restaurants, shops and spa as much as they come for the casino experience."

Among the stores found on "The Walk" are Brooks Brothers, Izod, Geoffrey Beene, Coach, Tommy Hilfiger, Nautica and Kenneth Cole.

"I like shopping here," said Carol Foley, 46, of Clinton while looking over items at the Gap. "There's a lot of nice stuff and good prices. When I tell my friends about it they're surprised. There's more to Atlantic City than people know."

Philly soul man Musiq, who grew up with Gamble and Huff's TSOP (The Sound of Philadelphia), will share the Boardwalk Hall stage Saturday with Detroit smoothie Kem Owens.

If you're thinking Atlantic City for New Year's Eve, now is the time to book hotels. Space is always at a premium when it comes to the year-end celebration. It would also be wise to pick up tickets at this time for New Year's Eve shows. Among those on tap: The Brian Setzer Orchestra (Caesars), KC & the Sunshine Band (Hilton), Tony Orlando (Tropicana), Smokey Robinson (Resorts) and the Wailers (Trump Marina).

Isn't it time to get cozy?

With the temperature finally dropping, we want to turn off the ceiling fans and curl up with a good book under a pile of soft blankets or watch old movies on the sofa, wrapped up in something warm.

Lucky for us, the fabrics we love to wear (buttery suedes, cuddly chenilles, comforting fleece) are available in fashions for the home. From discount stores to high-end retail shops, we found wonderful throws, pillows and bedding that will help take the chill off our North Texas winter.

"The trend has been to include furs, chenilles and suedes in the bedroom -- things that are soft to the touch and luxurious," says Jenn DeBarge-Goonan, home style expert for Marshalls, a Massachusetts-based off-price retailer.

"After a long day, when you slip into bed, you want it be cozy and comfortable."

You also want it to be easy to clean. While we love our deerskin suede shirt, for example, we've paid a small fortune at the leather cleaners to remove stains. Thanks to the inventive use of polyester (microsuede is a poly blend, sometimes with a touch of latex, for stretch), most of the suede/leather items we found for the home are washable (a big plus when your dogs love your microsuede duvet cover as much as you do), and the colors (loden greens, terra cottas, rich browns of every shade) add to the warmth.

Home television's Chris Madden, who now has her own line of furniture and household goods through JC Penney, offers a coordinating group of micro-denier suede duvet covers, bedspreads, shams, pillows and window coverings. And there are matching microchenille throws, which also are washable. Madden, who has designed for celebrity heavyweights such as Katie Couric and Oprah Winfrey, offers a lot of style at affordable prices. The line ranges from $50 to $150 and features finishing touches such as quilting and corded edges.

At Mervyn's, we found microsuede throws for $19.99; we bought several to use throughout the house and for when holiday guests arrive.

You can even keep the dog out of your space by getting him a stylish bed of his own. We picked up a large fleece pillow with a beautiful chocolate fake-suede backing at PetSmart recently for less than $60. Now everyone's warm and happy.

Hot cocoa, anyone?

After hearing the buzz on the newest addition to the Filene's Basement family, DNR sent an anonymous shopper to New York City's Union Square to get a firsthand look at all the off-price goods.

Sportswear boasted Belvedere cashmere zip cardigans for $ 199, Perry Ellis crewnecks for $ 69, DKNY jeans for $ 29 and Joseph Abboud corduroy pants for $ 49. Twelve-plus racks of tailored clothing showed off labels from Hickey Freeman and Zegna for $ 599 each, Ted Baker for $ 399, and Hugo Boss for $ 299. To wear under the suits, the shopper found dress shirts ranging from Claiborne to Missoni, and ties that included Geoffrey Beene and Gucci labels. And to wear under it all, underwear from Calvin Klein, 2(x)ist and RIPS in rows of large displays.

In the outerwear department, the shopper found leathers from Marc New York for $ 299 and Reaction Kenneth Cole for $ 199, Arnold Brant shearlings marked at $ 399 and Nautica Competition jackets for $ 79.

Finally, the shopper found the top-of-the-line merchandise in "The Vault," easily distinguishable by sparse racks, spacious displays and markdown stickers. Had shoppers already demanded lower prices on their luxury items? Pleated Prada pants were marked down to $ 107 from their original discounted price of $ 149. Other items from designers like Armani Collezioni, Dolce & Gabbana and Miu Miu were similarly stickered with further discounts.

The verdict? The concierge's inconvenient location on the store's third floor notwithstanding, the secret shopper looks forward to another visit, but next time without an assignment from DNR.

HEADLINE: VF'S PATH TO PROFITS IN CHINA.

BYLINE: Malone, Scott

BODY:

Byline: Scott Malone

The last time he was in China, VF Corp.'s Terry Lay saw something that provided a new perspective on the concept of markdown.

The chairman of VF's global jeanswear coalition stopped into a Carrefour, where "all women's jeans were on sale for $ 3.50, all local competitors, none of which you or I would probably know or recognize."

Through its Wrangler brand and other labels, VF is a dominant supplier in the mass market in the U.S. today. But in the U.S., that means selling jeans for more than five times that $ 3.50 price.

In China, he continued, "You'll be hard-pressed to find denim above $ 9 in the mass market today -- $ 5 drives the market. And local brands drive the market, and in some cases you have a button with no buttonhole cut. So it isn't at all what you'd expect to find here [in the U.S.]. Frankly, when we run through the equation, we're not sure we could buy the denim and meet that $ 5 price equation."

Nonetheless, the Greensboro, N.C.-based apparel giant's eight-year-old operations in China are profitable. Getting to that point has required climbing a steep learning curve, running the business on an entirely different model and carving out a new price niche.

In China, VF's jeans -- primarily the Lee and Wrangler brands -- sell for $ 60 to $ 160, about three times their typical selling price in the U.S. This is in a country where the per-capita gross domestic product of $ 5,000 is just 13.2 percent of that of the U.S.

Lay estimated that in China's 10 largest cities -- the home of most of the country's wealthy and middle-class residents and the source of most of its consumer spending -- shoppers buy about 10 million pairs of jeans a year. That compares with more than 400 million pairs in the U.S. The numbers reflect a vast cultural difference.

"A bolt of denim -- no one even saw that before the 1980s. And frankly, culturally, denim has not been where the Chinese have come from," he said. "It's so unlike when the Russian market opened and people couldn't wait to get their hands on Levi's, or hopefully Lee and Wrangler. It's different here."

Just as the industry is different in its size and pricing, the way of selling in China would be completely foreign to the typical American apparel executive.

"Retail is quite fragmented, and it's a quite complex animal to get your arms around," Lay said. "The top 50 retailers in China represent less than 5 percent of total retailing there today. That is quite different from what you find in the U.S. or Europe, where those top 50 retailers are approaching a third of the market."

Another major structural difference is that in China, the leading retailers are in the real estate business, not in the business of buying and selling merchandise. Whereas in the U.S. the first step to introducing a line is typically meeting buyers and persuading them to allocate some of their budget to one's new brand, in China, one needs to find available space in a store and negotiate lease terms.

Lay sketched three models of entering the Chinese market:

- A Western brand can go on its own.
- It can find a distributor.
- It can license its brand out.

He led the Lee brand into China in 1996, and the company opted to go in on its own, trying to use what it learned about Chinese business practices through sourcing to drive a retail rollout. It was slow going, but today the Lee and Wrangler brands operate 82 of their own stores and sell to 125 wholesale accounts, for presence in a total of 207 stores. The division expects to reach the 310-store mark by 2006, Lay said.

"For eight years' work, to be in 207 doors, frankly the people looking over my shoulder wonder why we couldn't have gotten there quicker," Lay admitted.

Going solo in China is expensive, but can be rewarding, he said. "I would say it's ideal, but you've got to be prepared to invest," he said, a hurdle that's easier for the $ 5.21 billion corporate behemoth than it might be for smaller firms "Obviously, your investment is going to be much higher here, but you have the benefit of totally controlling your destiny and all the top-line and bottom-line rewards... It's a four-to- five-year road to profitability [in China]."

Two of VF's backpack brands, Jansport and Kipling, have opted to use distributors to enter China rather than operating their own retail locations.

Those brands are now sold at 60 points of sale, by distributors who handle a number of brands.

"Probably the best distributor partners... get their critical mass by leveraging multiple brands," he said. Besides wholesaling the brand to retailers who do operate on the Western buying model, the distributor also takes responsibility for opening branded stores, Lay said.

"We prefer a distributor who is running retail. That is the primary and fundamental piece," he said. Rapid retail expansion is one of the advantages of working with a distributor, Lay noted, saying, "You're really looking for the expertise to help you crack that retail infrastructure."

The North Face and Nautica operate in China through licensees, Lay said, with The North Face present in 45 retail locations and Nautica -- which has been operating in China for five years -- in 120.

Nautica's Chinese licensee, he said, has "brought the retail competency and knowledge and we've built out freestanding stores right through going into the department store space and [leasing] that space... We think it's important to stamp retail first and then move on to wholesale partners."

One of the advantages of working with a distributor or a licensee is that those businesses likely have detailed knowledge of the local market, which can help a brand to expand quickly. But Lay emphasized that it's critical for companies that are using such partners to study the market closely or they'll find that their business is beyond their control.

"Your partner has the local market knowledge, and frankly, they're going to know a lot about the consumer and the retailer," he said. "If you don't work hard to know something about that, they're in fact going to continue to retain that."

That said, he added, "You can scale faster if you have the right partner, for sure, and you'll do it with a lot less investment."

New ranking is imprecise but solidifies street's retail reputation By Laurel Wamsley For the Post The recent news that Na prikope ranks as the 18th most-expensive shopping street in the world confirmed the street's position as the prime retail spot in Prague. There are more glitzy and luxurious shopping streets, notably Parizska in Old Town. But no other street can match the cachet of Na prikope. "It's where you can find Mango, Benetton, Zara and the Mysibek gallery," says Natasa Milic at Jones Lang LaSalle. "It's where all the banks have their headquarters. And even in terms of the local customers, they're affluent. It's the prime retail pitch." British fashion chain H&M waited three years for a spot on Na prikope. H&M will soon open a flagship store in the Melantrich building on Wenceslas Square, but both Milic and Cushman & Wakefield Healey & Baker's Jan Kotrbacek note that H&M typifies the sort of retailer that does well on Na prikope. The street's ranking in the top 20 shopping locations in the world was compiled by Cushman & Wakefield Healey & Baker, though on closer inspection the numbers can be somewhat misleading. The ranking included only one top shopping street from each country; when all the world's cities are taken into account, Na prikope ranks 55th. It's tied with the North End of Croydon, a borough of London. ("Expensive" in this report refers to average rent prices, which on Na prikope are 1,800 euros [56,520 Kc/$2,340] per square meter per year.) But in practical terms, the ranking hardly matters. Na prikope is the most coveted retail location in the city, and there are more prospective tenants than there are places to put them. The retailers who come to Na prikope are hungry for the 52,000 pedestrians that stroll its broad sidewalks daily, according to data from Cushman & Wakefield. And as rents continue to rise, gradually the crystal shops and cafes are replaced by multinational retailers such as Nautica, Ecco and Lacoste. The consensus in the real estate world is that the change is good. "Many storefronts have changed," Potrbacek says, "and they have changed to better retailers." Kotrbacek compares Na prikope to Paris' Champs-Elysees, and it's an apt comparison. Not only are both streets now lined with similar retail chains, but in terms of local competition, nothing else comes close. Just as the rent on the Champs-Elysees is nearly twice that of the next most expensive street in France, Na prikope's rents are two and a half times higher than the country's No. 2 spot, the area around Brno's Svobody Square, where rents are 720 euros per square meter per year. Is it worth the price? Obviously the big retailers think so, and not just because the street is the main pedestrian thoroughfare in Prague. The storefront is also a marketing tool that aids brand recognition and solidifies a retailer's prominent reputation. People who don't have time to stop as they scurry down Na prikope during their lunch break may remember the brand when they see it at their local shopping center and decide to visit the branch when they have time to buy. The continuing upscale development of Na prikope is no accident. Real estate consultancies such as Cushman & Wakefield and Jones Lang LaSalle are working to create a consistent image of what Na prikope represents. "If a company comes to me and says, 'I want to be on Na prikope,' I say, 'What is your brand?'" says Potrbacek. "That is the most important thing to me. The most trendy, the most fancy brands should be here - but not necessarily expensive. But there are still a lot of brands missing here." Those brands may never get to Na prikope, which has essentially run out of new space for retailers. "There are simply no units available on Na prikope and the bottom of Wenceslas," says Milic, noting that most of the tenants on the street have signed 10-year leases. Already, upscale retailers and hotels are moving up Wenceslas Square. Though it's geographically close to Na prikope, it's very different in terms of current retail outlets - though that's changing, too. "My view is that Wenceslas has a lot of potential at the moment," says Kotrbacek. "It has the same pedestrians, but Na prikope has more stores. Marks & Spencer recently opened a new store on Wenceslas Square. Nike, Adidas, Puma and Reebok are all located there. A new hotel will open there in the refurbished building. So this will move the prestigious brands further up. It will change completely." Milic is less confident that Wenceslas Square will be the next big shopping street. "With Debenhams and Marks & Spencer, it's certainly becoming more developed," she says, "but it will be a long time in coming. The buildings are old and narrow, and most of the development will be on the lower part. The upper part has a long way to go in terms of attracting big department stores." Still, future retail development will have to expand beyond Na prikope, and locations adjacent to the city's main shopping strip are the logical place to go. As developers and retailers eye these other locations, Prague is bound to grow in quality and sophistication as a shopping destination. It's not hard to imagine that someday the city's shopping district will stretch from namesti Republiky to the Vltava, as long as the Champs-Elysees.  Designers offer style, and maybe warmth, in winter coats

The holidays wouldn't seem festive without the perfect coat - even in Houston's mild weather.

And never mind warmth. Here, it's about form over function.

The holiday season ushers in a variety of stylish coats - from embellished wools to colorful furs - that make a statement for any winter wardrobe.

"There are few cities where you buy coats strictly for warmth," says Jamie Davidson, co-owner of the upscale Arkansas-based coat company Normandy & Monroe. "People want coats that are more in style."

The design house, which recently held a trunk show at Neiman Marcus, offers a silk-velvet checked coat that is perfect as a blazer or lightweight wrap for the office or even a holiday party. Made of Scalamandre fabric, typically used for upholstery, Normandy & Monroe coats are an unusual and stylish take on the traditional cover-up. The company also makes A-line coats with sweetheart necklines in brocade, cashmere and mohair.

For those who want lots of warmth in their coats, designers have gone crazy over fur - both real and faux. Trendsetter Marc Jacobs trimmed a car coat with fur for a glamorous '50s look, and Tracy Reese features a faux fur coat worn with cropped pants and camisole.

J. Mendel trimmed bolero jackets and capelets with sheared mink, and Ann Taylor went for a belted rabbit-fur jacket and a fur-felt fedora.

If you're looking for extra sizzle this season, try Tuleh's cropped fur jacket with pink collar, or Etro Milano's colorfully sequined wool coat.

If a full coat is a bit too much for holiday parties, colorful capes are a fashionable alternative.

In men's coats, almost anything goes. Nautica's double-breasted charcoal cashmere wool topcoat works for dressy occasions - worn over a suit - or for bopping around - paired with waterproof tech pants.

Bare-chested models at the Toronto runway shows went one step further by sporting giant fur coats and jeans - the ultimate fashion statement.

Christmas would be so much simpler if we all did our shopping at Dick's Old Time 5 & 10 in historic downtown Branson.

Dick's motto is "We got what you forgot," and where else can you find back-scratchers, Tinker Toys, Lincoln Logs, cap guns, pickup sticks, kaleidoscopes and paper dolls? The Wurlitzer jukebox and model trains running overhead aren't for sale, but add to the vintage dime store ambiance. Branson, of course, is known for its live entertainment. But between visits to the Baldknobbers or Shoji Tabuchi, you can squeeze in some world-class shopping at more craft stores, specialty shops and outlet malls than you can shake a stick at.

Outlets galore

Branson, in fact, boasts that it is one of the top outlet mall destinations in the country, with more than 200 retailers at Factory Merchants Branson, Tanger Outlet Center and The Shoppes at Branson Meadows. The malls say shoppers save 25 to 65 percent on designer-name goods including housewares, clothing, shoes, luggage, jewelry, accessories and specialty items.

The Tanger Outlet Center on Highway 76, for example, has more than 70 brand-name outlet stores, including Banana Republic, Polo Ralph Lauren, Mikasa and Bose. Tanger is luring shoppers this holiday season by offering a free toy snowman with sales of $150 or more, plus a chance to win a four-day vacation at an all-inclusive Mexican resort, no purchase necessary.

A holiday fact sheet, courtesy of Tanger, says the average man plans to spend $666 on presents this holiday season. In something of a surprise, the average woman will spend less, about $624. The easiest present to shop for: gift certificates. Four percent of consumers are last-minute shoppers.

The lineup at Factory Merchants Branson includes Izod, Nautica, Reebok, Rockport, Full Size Fashions and Ozark Mountain Quilts. The Shoppes at Branson Meadows has Leather Outlet, Tool Town, Golf USA and Christian Gift Outlet.

Art of the Ozarks is featured at the Engler Block, which has 27 individually owned shops. Artists will make pottery, candles, moccasins, jewelry, furniture, dolls and portraits while you wait.

Branson's IMAX Entertainment Complex also has some unique shopping, with a huge selection of gags and magic accessories at Dazzle Magic Shop and complimentary samples of body oils and demonstrations of massage therapy at Kelly's All Natural Pain Relief.

What has to be the best-named store is at Branson Mall, where Hicks from the Sticks sells gifts and nostalgia items. Alaska Down South on Highway 76 carries a line of items for the owner of a rustic cabin or hunting lodge who doesn't want to bag his own trophies.

"We have a good selection of badger, bear, mountain lion, wolverine and lynx hides," said Bob Gillespie, owner of Alaska Down South. "We have floor lamps made of elk antler, and antler chandeliers, which actually are made of a resin. We have all kinds of animal figurines and cold-cast bronze statues."

Prices range from $55 for a skunk hide and $140 for a white Arctic fox fur to $3,400 for a mounted mountain lion and $5,100 for a stuffed adult male African lion.

Don't forget Silver Dollar City

You can really get into the spirit at Silver Dollar City, which uses more than 4 million lights and 1,000 decorated trees to put on its dazzling Old Time Christmas. The event features a Holiday Light Parade with musical floats, a five-story tree with lights coordinated to blaze with the musical movements of carols, and a production of Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol" that includes flying spirits and vanishing ghosts.

At a re-creation of the ancient town of Bethlehem, the Living Nativity is staged at a two-story theater-in-the-round with actors and live animals presenting the birth of Christ.

Silver Dollar City also has the state's best collection of artisans and craftsmen at 40 shops, where a story comes free with the handcrafted items. You can buy handblown tree ornaments and glass angels, wheel-thrown pottery dinnerware and vases and handcrafted candles in holiday scents such as pumpkin spice, cinnamon and Scotch pine.

Among the master crafters demonstrating their wares are Donnie Ellison, who has been making heirloom oak baskets for 32 years; Rick Duckworth, whose carved-leather replica holsters and other Western gear are coveted by collectors; and Ray Johnson, whose Damascus steel knives are prized for their beauty as well as their strength.

November 22, 2004 Monday

LENGTH: 1075 words

HEADLINE: Mackey McDonald, chairman and CEO of VF, discusses his company's brands and his customers

ANCHORS: DAVID FABER, JIM CRAMER

BODY:

DAVID FABER, co-host:

What's hot for the holiday shopping season this year? Well, we can ask Mackey McDonald. He's the chairman and CEO of VF Corporation, which has a lot more brands than just Wrangler and Lee jeans.

Mr. McDonald, thanks for being with us.

Mr. MACKEY McDONALD (Chairman and CEO, VF): Thank you, Dave.

FABER: Let's talk about what's hot. I mean, I'm looking right here at some outdoor wear, it would look like, sort of for sports type things, and you own a number of those brands. Is that going to sort of lead things?

Mr. McDONALD: Well, I think what you see in the consumer today, they're smart, they're frugal. Their main focus would be on performance products as well as value. And...

FABER: What's a performance product? What does that mean?

Mr. McDONALD: Well, a performance product is something not just replenishing an item you have in your closet, but something that does--that performs better than what you had before. It is--wrinkles less, it keeps you warmer, it keeps you drier. This is Nautex from Nautica. It's a bright fleece item that is very tightly knit so it keeps you extremely warm and at the same time it's lightweight and it wicks, it keeps you dry. So ...(unintelligible).

JIM CRAMER, co-host:

You can hold it up if you want, show everybody that.

Mr. McDONALD: Sure, yeah.

FABER: Yeah, take some marketing opportunity. Why not?

Mr. McDONALD: Yeah, certainly.

CRAMER: All right. Well, let me understand. We've had the outdoor fellow here and makes some great stuff, but it seems like you guys are always perennially looking for acquisitions of which--could you give me the process? You buy a company and then what happens? Because I know you keep the brand, but how do you make it so that that company fits in in a VF way?

Mr. McDONALD: Well, the real strength of the outfit is the fact that we don't try to totally integrate companies. We want to leave the marketing as it is. We want the brand to stand alone, stay where it is in the culture and environment in which it was born and grown. We want to bring a lot of synergies, the North Face, Nautica, other companies and brands we've bought. We bring operating skills. We're operators. We don't just acquire companies. We help improve the operation. So we get the product to the shelf, we get good cost, we manage the technology, we manage a lot of financial controls and other things that allow the brands to focus on their consumer and their product and their product development.

FABER: Nautica, North Face, JanSport are all growing a lot faster than the good old jeans business. But give me a sense in terms of your revenues how that comes out. I would assume jeans are still the larger part of the company.

Mr. McDONALD: They are still the larger part and they're a great part of it. They aren't growing as rapidly as some of our other businesses, but at the same time, they're very stable brands, they're growing their brand share in a tough market. They have great cash flow. They allow us to do a lot of things with the company to grow the company. So we like those categories. It's one of the more stable categories in the apparel business.

CRAMER: Mr. McDonald, on Friday, there was a lot of talk that Sears and Kmart could create together some sort of antitrust issue. As a big supplier to everybody, would you think that this would be an anti-competitive merger or a competitive merger, given the fact that I imagine you want to have more people to do business with than just Wal-Mart.

Mr. McDONALD: All right. Well, you know, yeah, we certainly--we're very happy with the situation there because they're both great customers of ours. They both are targeted different consumer groups. We sell different brands to each one of those customers. I think they will be able to operate more efficiently. They will probably move some of the stores and be able to accomplish some things strategically. They have a smart group of people working there. And we will continue to supply them our brand. So we don't think it would be a negative impact on their business or certainly on our business as a result of it.

FABER: Now Levis, of course, created an entirely separate line for Wal-Mart. What has your Wal-Mart business been like?

Mr. McDONALD: Our Wal-Mart business is very strong. They're a great customer of ours. We've had a long relationship with them. They...

FABER: Are they the single-largest customer of the company?

Mr. McDONALD: They are the single-largest customer of the company...

FABER: Yeah.

Mr. McDONALD: ...as they are for many consumer products companies. And we have a great business with them and a growing business with them. We've had new competition enter there, but our Wrangler Hero program is a great program. We've launched, also, our Wrangler Jeans Company line with them this year and it's been extremely successful, so it's a growing business.

FABER: Wal-Mart, of course, has been taken up in the debate about outsourcing, and, you know, your company, 10, 12, 15 years ago used to manufacture a lot of what you do here in the United States. You don't any longer. You manufacture around the world. When you're asked about this or you're even blamed by some, what do you say?

Mr. McDONALD: Right. Well, we stay competitive. The most important thing for any company is to have great products at great value. That's what the consumer's looking for, that's what they spend their money on, and that's what we've been doing as a company is keeping ourselves competitive. As a result of doing that, you create higher-paying jobs, you create jobs that aren't the lower end. Moving low-cost jobs offshore and increasing the number of higher-paying jobs is what this country's been built on. It's been going through that transition for years and will continue to go through it, and we're part of that.

CRAMER: Absolutely. All right, that's Mackey McDonald, chairman and CEO of VF Corp. In full disclosure, I own shares in Kmart. I asked a question about Kmart. I always disclose my holdings.

And, sir, have a good holiday season.

Mr. McDONALD: Thank you. I hope you do...

CRAMER: Thank you so much for coming on the show.

Mr. McDONALD: ...buy some VF products.

CRAMER: Ah, there you go. Next, Metal Management CEO. Just--we cover everything--Metal Management, U-Store-It, VF Corp., SIRIUS.

FABER: It's unbelievable.

CRAMER: Right.

FABER: I'm shocked.

CRAMER: How much do we cover here?

Anyway, he just got back from China. Keep it with K&C for a full report.

FOLLOWING a day of being thankful for all the things they have, thousands of Shore area residents went out early yesterday to shop for more - and retailers were thankful for the business.

"First, we tried Kohl's (in Toms River), which opened at 5:30, to get this DVD player," said Dorothy Weston, 46, of South Toms River. She and her daughter, Lauren McCall, were shopping at the Target store on Hooper Avenue, Toms River.

"They (Kohl's) had 70 DVD players on sale, and we were customer 71. So, we hurried over here. Luckily they (Target) had still had some, and we bought two."

"If today is an indication of how the season will go, we'll have a great year," said Tom MacWilliams, store manager of Target in Toms River, echoing the sentiments of supervisors at other area stores.

Black Friday - the big, holiday-season opener for retailers nationwide - was well under way before dawn, with a number of stores in Ocean and Monmouth counties getting a jump on the traditional 6 a.m. unlocking.

Debra Panzarella, marketing director of the Freehold Raceway Mall in Freehold Township, said an early review indicated that business was greater than last year. While numbers weren't available at midday, Panzarella said she had polled several stores, which were reporting larger crowds.

"They said they were blowing away last year's numbers," she said. "Quite a few said they were up."

Business was brisk yesterday at the Ocean County Mall in Toms River, said mall marketing director Susan Howlett. "I got here at 6:45 a.m. and the lot was almost full."

KB Toys had close to 300 people waiting in line at 4:30 a.m., she said, intent on bargains for video games, Barbie dolls and a stuffed animal called a Luv Cub, she said.

Howlett said shoppers seemed to be "happy, not frantic."

Electronics, jewelry and toys drew shoppers to malls across the country, said a spokesman for the National Retail Federation. A survey commissioned by the Washington, D.C.-based organization showed that up to 130 million Americans will shop this weekend.

The federation forecasts that consumers will spend more than $219 billion this holiday season, up about 4.5 percent from last year.

5:30 a.m. frenzy

Alisa Girard of Howell denied herself sleep for one particular bargain - a Mintek 7-inch portable DVD player with carrying case, two headphones and remote control. Normally priced at $229.99, it was on sale yesterday for $159.99.

Girard, 44, shopping at Kohl's on Route 9 in Howell, said she was determined. She got up at 4 a.m., woke her son, Michael, and they reached the store by 4:45. They were among the first in line in a small vestibule jammed with shoppers queued up for bargains as the 5:30 a.m. opening approached.

As a store employee unlocked the doors, Girard - who had learned in advance where the DVD players were located - walked, then half jogged, toward the items while balancing a container of coffee.

Her 12-year-old son had taken off at a jog and was way ahead of her.

They were able to grab three players as a swarm of customers surrounded the stack of 50, bumping each other and snatching up the boxes as fast as they could. One player will be a Christmas present for Michael. The other two are for Girard's sister and a friend, she said.

In less than a minute, the 50 boxes were gone.

"Don't you put those down," Girard joked with her son about the DVD players. "You can't take your eyes off of them."

Rosemarie Suter, the store's housewares department supervisor, said customers had called on Wednesday asking her if she would consider hiding some of the DVD players in different areas of the store and disclosing the hiding places.

"I said, 'No,'" she said.

Old-fashioned shopping

Not all Black Friday shoppers headed for big-box stores or malls. Some were attracted to small-town main streets, such as Manasquan's.

Ingrid D'Alessandro and her mother, Christine Nadell, both of Cream Ridge, said they liked the atmosphere.

"They have everything here without the craziness of the malls," Nadell said. "I prefer to shop in a place like this."

Her daughter used the Black Friday sales to help her shop for her sister's Dec. 31 wedding.

Still, D'Alessandro said, she thought she'd be finished with her holiday shopping by the second week of December.

Carl Mertens, owner of Mertens Jewelers on Main Street, said Black Friday downtown is different than in a mall.

"I've been here 32 years and in all those years, I can't say yes, when Black Friday comes, people come pouring in to do their shopping," he said. "We're busy. Not overly busy, but we do see increased traffic on the weekend."

When the Target in Toms River opened at 6, a line of several hundred undaunted shoppers - braving a chill wind under the full moon - snaked far out into the parking lot.

"I have been here since 5 a.m. - and, as you can see, I was not the first," said Jennifer Tarmontano, a kindergarten teacher from Toms River.

"They're selling a digital camera for $97. That's a great deal. There's a limited supply," she said. "So, that's why I'm here in the dark freezing."

A wheel bargain

Bob Frolich, from Zanesville, Ohio, visiting his mother in Lavallette for Thanksgiving, had something else in mind.

"Hot Wheels!" he said, as the door opened and the line began to move briskly along. "They're 49 cents each. Yes, for my kids. But for me, too!"

Around noon at the Jackson Outlet Village on Route 537, the vast expanse of parking lots had long been full, and the surging human river of holiday shoppers was in full motion.

Most shoppers at the 70-store horseshoe-shaped mall yesterday used a simple strategy: Get there early and walk from one end to the other, hitting any interesting stores in between.

Sisters Cheryl Catoni of North Brunswick, Ceil McCarthy of South Brunswick, and Nancy Weir and Sharon Tiernan, both of Staten Island, met there at 8:30 a.m. Catoni said she's shopped there for about five years, while her sisters were there for the first time.

"We started at the other end and shopped to here," said McCarthy as the sisters headed toward the food court to refuel. "It's getting crowded now, but it was fine when we got here this morning."

"I really like it," said Tiernan, who had spent about $300 by noon on Christmas gifts for friends and relatives. "I like that everything is laid out in an easy circle."

While it was tough for the sisters to pick a favorite store - Weir said their plan was to hit "almost all of them" - they said they found the best deals at The Gap and Nautica.

John Cavanaugh, 41, of Jackson, was a newcomer to Black Friday's morning rush.

"I usually come in the evening, when the crowds have thinned out," he said. "But this year, I tried getting some discounted DVDs."

He started at 5 a.m. at the Brick ShopRite, where there was a sale on DVDs, but other shoppers beat him to the desired items.

"I then went to Kohl's, but once again I was too late," he explained. "I drove to Best Buy. I pulled in the parking lot, saw the crowd and pulled out again."

At last, Cavanaugh made it to CompUSA on Chambers Bridge Road in Brick, where he bought several discounted DVDs.

"Next year, I'm going back to evening shopping," he said.

Staff writers Michael Amsel, Bill Bowman and James Quirk and The Associated Press contributed to this story.

Can me a retail junkie, but I'm always shopping the stores both here and in East Hampton. So writing a column about my two favorite "textbook" department stores -- Macy's East and Bloomingdale's -- for our Federated issue is really a busman's holiday. I thought I had them down pat. Which one carried which labels. The way each store draws a bead on its different customers. And how these giants stay ahead of the competition. In case you didn't see Federated's latest figures, they sure do. Its profits bounced up 10.4 percent in the third quarter.

I visited Macy's East and Bloomingdale's on 59th Street and in Soho a few weeks ago, and what amazes me is the way both keep reinventing themselves. Okay, Bloomie's has a new main floor in its uptown store that's fantastic. And Macy's thinks enough of men's wear to put it on four floors. But even with the same parent, they're as distinct in their approach as the corner of 34th Street at Herald Square is from 59th Street and Lexington Avenue.

At the crossroads of the retail world, Macy's certainly has something for everyone. When you watch the stream of customers pouring through the men's departments, you realize that's something of an understatement.

Bloomie's uptown is just as hectic, give or take a couple of Lincoln Towne Cars parked outside the entrance. When Marvin Traub ran the store years ago, he billed it as "Like No Other Store in the World." It still is, in my book, especially when you add in Bloomingdale's Soho, its downtown sibling that pinpoints its hip, 20-something men's customer with rifle-shot accuracy.

I'll skip the pages of notes and names in my steno book -- and jump to the big X's in the margin highlighting the really great stuff. There were 17 after shopping the one Macy's and two Bloomie's.

What did I find? At Bloomingdale's uptown, I stumbled over "Modern Factor," the brand-new tailored clothing department totally devoted to the sophisticated young dude. Then at Macy's I saw a quiet invasion of dress shirts and ties into the sanctum of the tailored department on the second floor. And at both stores there was a lively, freestyle approach to young designer/street-urban/urban departments where serious suits and dressy topcoats shared the same rack with sport shirts, jeans and leathers. Hey, this guy is growing up.

BLOOMIE'S SUITS ITS MAN

The last time I shopped the young designers (Trend Cornelliani, Theory, etc.) department at Bloomingdale's uptown, suits were hung with woven shirts, leather bombers, jeans, etc. Last week the suits were gone! They were all moved into Modern Factor, that new department nearby created especially for the high-end guy who wants his kind of body-conscious clothing his way.

It didn't happen overnight, and the store shows what's happening to clothing in a great, sixfold mailer to customers. It begins with a picture of a cool guy wearing a John Varvatos brown blazer and jeans, with the copy: "There was a time when ..." On successive spreads, the copy continues, "Being a 'suit' meant ..." "Bowling to convention ..." "But times have changed ..." "And so have the suits."

Page two shows a couple of 20-somethings, one with a blue pinstripe suit and striped sport shirt, the other in a solid navy with a striped, open-collar shirt and zip-placket navy sweater.

The following spreads -- with resources including Trend Corneliani, Mario Matter, Burberry, Hugo Hugo Boss, Z Zegna, Luca Venturini, Ted Baker London, Paul La Fontaine and John Bartlett -- show a mix of dressy, dark suits with and without ties; a three-quarter topcoat; and a few dressy blazers, one worn with warmup sweatpants and a knit skating hat.

The final shot is of a cool guy wearing a velvet blazer, flare-leg slacks and a Justin Timberlake knit skating hat.

The very informed sales associate in the department told me, "This department isn't in Soho," and after spending the next morning at the downtown store, I saw why. The Modern Factor clothing shop really is the next step up for the Soho guy who used to buy his suits, shirts and ties in the Designer Lab shop downtown. He's arrived and Bloomie's is dressing him for it.

More about the Designer Lab downtown (which began uptown): It's for the guy who picks through a rack that holds everything from expensive jeans to black jacquard formal jackets, navy blue striped suit jackets and trousers, dress and sport shirts, zip-placket knit pullovers and a leather bomber jacket or two. Why not? That's his lifestyle and probably the way he hangs his own clothes at home.

CLASSIFICATIONS FINALLY ADD A PARTNER OR TWO

At Macy's I started my tour on the huge clothing floor with designer row -- from Hugo Boss and Joseph Abboud to Michael Kors. The big surprise? Dress shirts and ties are stocked right next to suits in these shops, and the only thing missing, according to a friendly salesman, is a fuller range of shirts to take care of the tall and short guys who buy the suits. Which is why ties are all over the place.

What really grabbed me was Macy's Pulse department on the third floor with its lively brands (and background music to match) and racks loaded with a mix of cool jeans, suit coats and trousers hung separately, sport shirts, warmups and outerwear. This is truly jeans heaven, and I happened upon this intent shopper in his early twenties wearing an obvious hand-destroyed pair of jeans that was all tears, tatters and shreds.

He turned out to be a Fashion Institute of Technology design student and was looking for jeans. When I asked him how many pairs he owned, his answer was, "Uhh..." He admitted to "maybe 60 or 75 pairs." And when I asked how much he spent for them, he didn't lose a beat, saying, "Oh, over a hundred." About a half hour later when I left, I spotted him romancing a pair of Versace jeans.

Now for the punch line both at Macy's and Bloomie's in their street/urban shops: I discovered dressy, slim, three-quarter topcoats and striped suits, hung on the same racks with jeans, sport shirts and suit jackets. That's how fast this market is changing. About the topcoats: My take is that they're really the next young, hip expression in outerwear just going to a new length to fit in.

The people in both stores are pros at bringing along their older sportswear customers with collections beamed at the 35-plus shopper. And what a cast of names: cK Calvin Klein, Kenneth Cole, Perry Ellis, Claiborne, H Hilfiger (at Bloomie's), Nautica, Sean John, etc. -- plus a powerful Polo shop.

To give you a taste of Polo at Bloomie's, the department has the rustic look of the Hamptons stores and the merchandise was more of the same. There were patch flannel plaid sport shirts, bottle-green corduroy pants, tartan plaid cargo pants and orange nylon bombers. And if that wasn't bright enough, I saw wool crewneck sweaters in colors that would make a plate of assorted Jell-O look like vanilla pudding. Wow!

Hideous novelty creations flourish this time of year

And now rappers are reviving the Coogi sweater Fashion writer David Graham begs holiday shoppers not to subject us to hideous knits In the men's fashion department this unfortunate pullover, all swirls and squiggles of contrasting colours, falls squarely into the infamous "what not to wear" category. File it under sartorial slip-ups along with loud plaid pants and pastel coloured suits.

They are to men's wardrobes what Jean Nate is to women's fragrance.

And they answer to many names. Call them fancy sweaters, novelty sweaters or party sweaters. They will come running, kicking and screaming. They are the loud person at the office party, a lot of volume, but nothing to say.

Menswear experts believe the grandfather of these bad boys is the Coogi, a wild and woolly creation from the Outback of Australia. In the '80s Coogi sweaters achieved international popularity among rich old dudes. Comedian Bill Cosby cracked us up in his expensive (up to $400) "overlay" sweaters with labyrinthine patterns and complicated weaves. He wore them on and off the set.

The Coogi's original popularity is a mystery, though generally it's believed the sweater was admired because it resembled a piece of modern art, or because it seemed to involve more craft than the usual monochrome cardigan. It became a conversation piece. But over the past 10 years its popularity has waxed and waned.

Knockoffs, however, proliferated and quality suffered.

Remarkably, after an extended period out of the limelight the authentic, Coogi has become a status symbol for rappers.

"It is pure upper-middle class professional garb," says Coogi spokesperson David Horowitz. "They are merely laying claim to this professional, well-off status."

That's fine for those struggling to afford the real McCoy. The problem is, however, that the market has been flooded with inexpensive, nauseating, spinning wannabes, that may capture the unsuspecting eye of a Christmas shopper.

In fact, the fancy/party/novelty sweater is cousin to the gimmicky "Christmas" sweater, covered in candy canes, holly, ice skaters or Santas.

December is a bad time for bad sweaters, as Hank Stuever of The Washington Post once mused.

"There are no critics at this time of year," he wrote. What we think goes "politely unexpressed. Maybe all of December is a huge fashion mistake, an exercise in extreme bad taste, a common horror. With no room for critics, it triumphs over all darkness: I like your sweater."

The Christmas sweater perfectly symbolizes the enforced happiness of the season, Stuever said.

"And whether it has tasteful snow flakes or a reindeer with a nose that actually lights up, the wearer is warning: "Watch out. I feel festive."

Despite their godawful reputation, at this time of year fancy sweaters of all varieties flourish. Over a matter of just a few days they will be purchased, wrapped, opened and exchanged.

According to The Scotsman, until the middle of the 19th century, knits were really only used as underwear or inexpensive work clothes for labourers. But the Victorians, who ushered in the sporting era including football, cricket and rugby, made knitwear a winter menswear staple.

"In 1922, Fair Isle sweaters were afforded the royal seal of approval when the Duke of Windsor donned a colourful example as Captain of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club in St. Andrews. The so-called "Prince of Style" became "the patron saint of modern knitwear" and his sanction created the template for jumpers (British for sweaters) to become the quintessential Christmas gift."

But somewhere along the line things went terribly wrong. And technology may be the culprit. The introduction of manmade fibres got sweaters on the wrong track. And as it turns out, the technology that allows knitting machines to turn out ever wilder designs and colour combinations made things worse.

That the original and its many copies have flourished baffles.

That it achieved new-found popularity in the hip-hop music world mesmerizes.

Coogi's Horowitz credits the late Notorious BIG (a.k.a. Biggie Smalls) with introducing the decades-old brand to the hip-hop generation.

"It's a status thing. At around $400 the sweaters have a lot of cachet," says Horowitz.

He suggests the popularity with rappers makes sense considering the degree to which the hip-hop community has embraced fashion labels such as Nautica and Tommy Hilfiger, and other status symbols including chrome-laden luxury cars and fine jewelry.

John Corallo, senior partner of The Coop, a contemporary menswear retailer in Toronto for the past 21 years, recalls the heyday of the Coogi sweater in the early '90s and he's amused that a youth market has embraced what had become a joke.

"Fashion is notorious for making 180-degree turns. Biggie Smalls was an artist who wanted to be noticed. He loved those sweaters because they fit him and because he loved the colours. He's the guy who wore a yellow suit."

The sweater is mentioned by name in the colourful lyrics of rappers including Angie Martinez and Lil Bow Wow.

At a recent hip-hop concert at New York's Avery Fisher Hall, reviewer Shaheem Reid enthused the audience was filled with rap fans wearing Coogi sweaters, matching fitted caps, retro sports hoodies and Timberland boots.

In 2002, a group of U.S. investors including Norman and Bruce Weisfeld, who are partners in FUBU (For Us, By Us), bought Coogi and commenced plans to re-launch the brand globally under a variety of lines including Coogi Luxe, Coogi Collection and Coogi Authentic. Even with the revival that's been compared to the Burberry re-launch, hip-hop followers continue to covet the genuine vintage article and scour shopping sites such as eBay for the real thing.

Despite this new-found popularity, unless you wear your pants with the crotch down around your knees and a lot of bling around your neck, don't buy this sweater.

With cheap air fares, a strong euro and discounts of 60% and more, it's no wonder the big-spending Irish are hitting New York in unprecedented numbers. Angela Phelan reports

It was the morning after Thanksgiving, a week ago yesterday. Shortly after 4am the Manhattan street cleaners were in the middle of their nightly toil, traffic flowed easily through the city that never sleeps, mostly yellow cabs and commuters about to start the early shift. The late revellers were making their way home after America's biggest holiday.

But around Macy's, on Herald Square and 34th Street, there was a distinct air of expectation. The legendary department store would kick off its biggest sale of the season within two hours and the queue snaked down 34th Street.

These were the early birds who had been queuing for at least an hour to guarantee that they snagged the best bargains when the store opened at 5.30am. As well as discounts of up to 60pc, there was a further 20pc discount for the first three hours as well as an additional 15pc off for overseas shoppers and yet another extra 15pc off for anyone who opened a store credit card account that day.

What was interesting about this queue was that most of the shoppers at the top of it were Irish. There were hundreds of them. They had set their hotel alarms for 3am and had already staked reconnoitered the labyrinthine store two days earlier. They knew immediately where the best bargains in Ralph Lauren, Calvin Klein, Armani, Donna Karan, Estee Lauder, Clinique, Samsonite and others were to be found. In the cellar they bought pots and pans, china and crystal and they almost created a run on bed linen and towels on the sixth floor.

By 10am they were back in their hotels surrounded by shopping bags and one of them laughed: "We've already saved the price of the flight this morning. The stuff is so cheap they're nearly giving it away."

The Irish shopper in New York has come a long way in a very short time. Aware that the fashion dictat in Manhattan is that only fools and tourists pay retail, they come armed with my guide to bargain shopping. So New York, Why You'll Never Pay Retail in the Big Apple Again (Eirsol, Euro 19.95).

For about the past 10 years, a pre-Christmas shopping trip to New York was the girlie thing to do. It was an opportunity for the gals to get away together, see a show, have some nice meals and do a bit of pressie shopping during the day.

But shopping in New York is a now year-round phenomenon since air fares became cheaper. Another factor is the soaring value of the euro against the dollar (this year it's at a record high of $ 1.338). And then there's the sales, which have been run year-round since 9/11.

Like the Brits (five million of them have spent $ 1 billion in the Big Apple so far this year, according to BBC estimates) the Irish are taking to the streets and avenues of New York in unprecedented numbers this year.

Aer Lingus reports that 400,070 passengers flew from Ireland to New York last year while this figure will exceed 500,000 by the end of 2004.

Tour America confirms that over 7,000 people have taken New York shopping packages since October. It still has a few packages left for last minute pre-Christmas shoppers and is offering return flights and two nights hotel accommodation for Euro 469. For the January sales, the cost of that package falls to Euro 359.

American Holidays are booked out before Christmas but have a six-night New Year's Eve package, return airfares, airport transfers, six nights accommodation and a 90-minute cruise for Euro 1,000 per person.

Continental Airlines offers a daily service from Dublin and Shannon to Newark in New Jersey, which is about the same distance from midtown as JFK. Delta offers a service through Atlanta and the gals also travel to New York with British Airways, Virgin, American Airlines and United Airlines from Heathrow. And, of course, there is an increasing number of Irish private jet setters.

No wonder stores like Bloomingdales, Saks, Macys and Century 21 now actively seek out Irish shoppers.

The same is true of Woodbury Common, the Rolls Royce of outlet centers, an hour north of the city. The some 250 stores there include Chanel, Armani, Gucci, Dior, Versace, Prada, YSL, Marc Jacobs, Michel Kors, JP Tod, Frette, Escada, La Perla, Malo, TSE, Boss, Zegna and even Waterford Crystal and just about any American designer or store you've ever heard of.

Ralph Lauren, Calvin Klein, Gant, Nautica, Donna Karen, Miss Sixty and Juicy Couture all boast at least 60% off retail prices. And for the big Thanksgiving sale further discounts included an extra 65% off Prada for the first three hours of the sale.

Some stores there opened at 3am as the mercury hovered around zero. But, hey, who cares about shopping in the dark or in the freezing cold? These prices can't be beaten anywhere in the world.

Some of the shoppers were buying Ralph Lauren polo shirts for $ 18, sweatshirts for $ 19 and cashmere sweaters for $ 69. These items sell in Ireland for Euro 80, Euro 125 and Euro 460 respectively. "The price is so good you could sell them back home," one confided. Judging by the amount she had bought, that had to be part of her plan.

According to John Fitzpatrick, President of Fitzpatricks Hotels USA, both of his Manhattan hotels have been booked solid with Irish shoppers every weekend since September. "Irish shopping business in New York is up well over 20% on last year since September while Irish shoppers are now discovering Chicago too and business there is up 50%.

"The shoppers usually arrive on

DNR MARKET REPORT -- Good, but not great -- at least not yet.

That's how retailers summed up the kickoff to the 2004 holiday shopping season. Sales in general have been solid, if not spectacular, but stores are expecting the momentum to pick up as the days race by.

Men's wear overall has managed to hold its own so far with sportswear such as cashmere sweaters, and tailored clothing -- everything from suits to velvet blazers -- ringing registers around the country. Promotions are definitely prevalent, with door-buster sales and coupons flooding the market. But the sales were planned and retailers have not hit the panic button.

The National Retail Federation estimated that 133 million people shopped the stores over Thanksgiving weekend, spending $ 22.8 billion. Apparel, music and electronics, in that order, were the most popular items, the group said, noting that the average shopper spent in excess of $ 265 over the first three shopping days. Some 49.1 percent of shoppers surveyed purchased apparel or accessories. As reported, NRF is projecting that 2004 holiday sales will hit $ 219.9 billion.

"Retailers know that the holiday season is not a sprint -- it's a marathon," said NRF president and chief executive officer Tracy Mullin. "Black Friday weekend is just the beginning of a monthlong race to the finish line."

Michael Niemira, chief economist and director of research for the International Council of Shopping Centers, agreed: "Given that only 6 percent of consumers have completed their holiday shopping thus far, there still is a considerable amount of holiday shopping yet to be done."

NRF continues to project an increase of 4.5 percent in holiday sales this year over last year.

NORTHEAST

NEW YORK -- Men's wear got off to a strong start in the Northeast with everything from velvet jackets to antique watches connecting with customers.

Although the business was promotional for many stores, the sales were planned and did nothing to dampen the spirits of merchants who were expecting a solid season.

"We did okay," said Kevin Morrissey, executive vice-president and general merchandise manager of men's wear for Macy's East. "The men's traditional collections business was very good," he noted, singling out sweaters, wovens and "basic giftables" as top performers.

In addition, the young men's area rebounded from what had been a soft trend, with fleece posting "particularly good" results. Morrissey also said furnishings, driven by shirts and ties, were performing, "especially at the upper end. And the clothing business was okay, led by suit separates and overcoats."

Overall, the business was not any more promotional than in the past, he said, noting that customers have come to expect sales today. "It's almost historical by now," he said.

Although Morrissey said he's "not feeling any sense of glee," he's optimistic that the categories that did well this fall will continue to perform, bolstered by a gift business. "We're off to a fairly good start and I think we'll see flat to low-single-digit increases," he said. "But the momentum we've seen so far is encouraging."

Cody Kondo, senior vice-president and GMM of men's for Saks Fifth Avenue, likened the start of the season to "the first leg of a triathlon. We've gotten off to a good start and we're pleased."

Highlights included collections from Zegna, Ralph Lauren Purple Label, Hugo Boss, Varvatos and Armani, as well as cashmere in several classifications including sweaters. Lacoste pique shirts, woven shirts and cashmere sport coats were also strong, he said, along with Armani and Zegna dress shirts and ties, and Charvet neckwear. Outerwear and jeans -- not traditionally gift items -- were popular as well, indicating men were shopping for themselves, he said. And Theory, Dolce & Gabbana and Prada designer collections were strong, along with jewelry, watches and cufflinks.

Kondo said the business was "slightly less promotional than last year" and he's optimistic that the season will end up on a high note.

Michael Gould, chairman of Bloomingdale's, said November was a "very solid month." And men's more than held its own. "We were very pleased with the men's business. It had a good increase over last year."

Performing best, he said, was "upscale, limited-distributed merchandise." In men's, the sportswear classification area was "extremely strong," as were collections. "And we had a good tailored month, even in a relatively warm month."

During the month, he added, the company "continued to de-emphasize sales. We had no pre-Thanksgiving sale this year -- and it used to be a big deal -- but we still made it." As a result, he said Bloomingdale's was "cautiously optimistic on the things we can control."

Tom Kalenderian, executive vice-president and GMM of men's for Barneys New York, said the start of the holiday shopping season was very good, particularly at the company's New York City and Los Angeles stores, which he characterized as "phenomenal." Manhasset, N.Y., and Seattle were also good but Chicago was a little tougher.

He said men were apparently buying for themselves, as evidenced by the strength of tailored clothing and outerwear. In fact, clothing sales in New York were up 40 percent on the Friday after Thanksgiving and "drove the store" in Manhasset that Sunday. This wasn't surprising, Kalenderian said, since clothing has been strong all fall. "It's very exciting to still see spurts this late into the season."

A "star key item" was the jacket in plush fabrics such as corduroy, moleskin and velvet. "Velvet works well with jeans and for black tie," he said. Also popular were dress shirts, ties and dress shoes.

In sportswear, the top category was Co-op, the company's more trendy merchandise, which Kalenderian said was "on fire. It's denim-based, technical outerwear from Prada Sport and footwear," he said. "And jackets were strong here too, to wear layered over jeans."

In general, the gift business was also strong, he said, citing among the sellers "gadget-y stuff," along with accessories, cold-weather items, belts, electronics, leather goods and jewelry such as cufflinks. In addition, personal furnishings such as pajamas, robes and boxers in "bright colors and fun patterns" were also popular.

Kalenderian said that while clothing was on sale, gifts were not, and he's hopeful that Christmas will be excellent and that the first quarter will be similarly good. "We're very optimistic."

At Bergdorf Goodman Men, strong fall sales continued into the holiday season, according to Robert Burke, vice-president and senior fashion director, and Margaret Spaniolo, senior vice-president and GMM of men's. "The overriding message is that the customer wants exclusive items," said Burke. Among the top sellers have been fur scarves and accessories that the store had made especially for its male customers with "masculine" skins such as coyote backed with men's wear patterns such as houndstooth.

Other hot items included Garrick Anderson colored tuxedo shirts, velvet bow ties and jackets, and vintage watches, said Spaniolo. Loro Piana fur-lined coats and tailored clothing, which has been strong all season, were also popular. "The men's designer floor was really busy," Burke added, mentioning Dolce & Gabbana, Etro and DSquared holiday sweaters as strong performers.

Helping add to their enthusiasm was the fact that the store "is not on sale," Spaniolo said, and won't break price until after Christmas. "We don't find it necessary." Burke believes that as long as the store continues to offer unique product, the strong sales will continue. "Our customer is discerning and willing to spend, but not on mediocrity," Burke said.

MIDWEST

CHICAGO -- The Thanksgiving weekend may have brought gray, overcast skies and snow showers to the Midwest, but retailers here have reason to believe a sunny forecast is on the way for the 2004 holiday shopping season.

"We're expecting a very competitive season given this year's economic environment," said Jennifer McNamara, a spokesperson for Marshall Field's. Luxury seemed to reign supreme at the company's State Street flagship in Chicago where shoppers were met with an extravagant selection of unique and rather indulgent gifts. Private-label cashmere sweaters and shearling slippers from Cole Haan proved to be hot sellers. Apres-ski apparel, including the $ 695 Degree parka from Polo by Ralph Lauren, followed closely behind, according to McNamara.

Sweaters were a strong draw with shoppers at Sears, where door-busting promotions scored with customers at the kickoff of the season. The turnout "was a little heavier than last year," said Rochelle Mangold, a spokesperson. "There were a lot of customers waiting at the doors before the stores even opened."

Although no single price point stood out in the sweater category, a merino wool version from Structure attracted its share of attention. Outerwear from Lands' End also made a splash with gift-givers. "We think outerwear will be strong this year, especially with colder weather on the way," said Mangold.

Shoppers at Carson Pirie Scott also took note of sweaters, but a return to dressing up in the workplace made men's furnishings a surprise early winner.

"Our customers seemed to be more interested in dress shirts and ties than they have in years past," said Buster Crook, men's vice-president of the Milwaukee-based department store. "They made it clear that a shift to dressing up will make tailored a strong trend this season."

Patterned dress shirts from Clalborne and Nautica were clear hits with holiday shoppers at Carson's. Sport coats and camel hair blazers -- especially those from Oscar de la Renta -- also performed well, as did cashmere sweaters.

"Cashmere really got off to a strong start," said Crook. "The $ 90 to $ 100 price point seemed to be the sweet spot for customers looking for a good-quality cashmere sweater." In addition, softer, transitional colors such as light blue and butter yellow sweaters from Izod, also posted big gains. "We gave them a new palette and they responded," he said. "Overall, we're very pleased [so far and we'd] love to see this trend continue."

At Mark Shale, president Scott Baskin is expecting sales to continue to build as the holiday season progresses. Woven shirts were already off to a hot start in just about every color of the rainbow. "Color is important this season, period," said Baskin.

And though the Midwest has so far experienced an unseasonably warm fall and early winter, Baskin still expects the store's outerwear selection to take off. "We have high hopes for good outerwear sales this year, especially since there are a few extra shopping days before Christmas," he said. "We expect the last two weeks to be our biggest."

DEB PAHL

SOUTHEAST

ATLANTA -- Southeastern retailers were thankful for a strong opening weekend to the holiday shopping season, but major stores are still cautious.

Not so with specialty retailers. Scott Collins, general merchandise manager of Downtown Locker Room (DTLR) in Baltimore, said: "It should be a great December," and Billy Neville, owner of The Rogue & Good Co. in Jackson, Miss., also had a big weekend and is optimistic about strong holiday sales.

Toni Browning, president of the Proffitt's/McRae's division of the Saks Department Store Group, was pleased with the first weekend, but said, "The general consensus is that [the season] will be challenging. It will be a late Christmas. It's getting later and later." She added that it will be "an electronics Christmas, but I don't think men's wear will be hurt by that."

Shoppers bought sweaters, leather jackets, neckwear, dress shirts, flannel shirts, long-sleeved T-shirts, outerwear, suits and sport coats, and games. Also popular were sport coats in patterns, corduroy and microsuede; suit separates by Oscar de la Renta and Perry Ellis; dress shirts; pink or green ties; traditional sportswear by Polo and private brands; long-sleeved T-shirts and sweaters by Consensus (private brand); Ruff Hewn rugged outdoor sportswear; bottoms; Columbia Sportswear; Fossil accessories; and gifts, particularly poker casino games.

"It's shaping up to be a traditional Christmas with dress-up still important," Browning said.

Goody's Family Clothing, based in Knoxville, Tenn., had a strong opening to the season, according to chief executive Robert Goodfriend, who said sales were up in the mid-single digits. Hot items included technical fleece tops, leather jackets, flannel shirts and woven sport shirts, as well as poker games. "It was an item-driven weekend, rather than assortment-driven," he said.

Goodfriend noted that margins were "somewhat better" than a year ago. Still, he added, "I'd like some cold weather. Cold weather will keep people in the spirit and get them into the stores."

DTLR's Collins said same-store sales were up 11.1 percent at his 38 stores. "We did really great. People wanted to get out and start their holiday shopping. Our stock levels are good and margins are up. I have no complaints. I hope the rest of the holiday season is this good."

DTLR's hot items were long-sleeved thermal T-shirts, The North Face outerwear, military jackets, and boots by Nike and Timberland. Although the weekend was promotional, Collins said, gross profit was up. "Our inventories were cleaner, so we were able to take advantage of off-price buys."

The Rogue & Good Co.'s Neville said his sales were up 22 to 24 percent for the opening weekend. The better men's store used a lot of direct mail to attract customers, and also had five key-item promotions: a cashmere jacket, a leather jacket, an overcoat, a barn jacket and a cotton zip-front pullover. But 99 percent of the merchandise was full price, he said.

Hot items included cashmere in basic and fashion colors, suits, neckwear, cashmere sport coats, blazers in navy and black, Zanella trousers and sportswear, and sportswear by Gant, Scott Barber, Tailor Byrd, Tommy Bahama and Lacoste. The top sportswear item was cut-and-sewn striped sport shirts.

BRENDA LLOYD

WEST COAST

LOS ANGELES -- The start of the holiday season met with mixed results in the West, with smaller boutiques upbeat and bigger retailers disappointed. But many were of the opinion that they had yet to see their busiest stretch. Sport coats and outerwear were strong performers across the board with cashmere singled out as a star.

Paul Fitzpatrick, general merchandise manager of men's for Macy's West, characterized the Thanksgiving weekend as "not great" and "slightly down compared to last year," though he declined to provide specific numbers. He said promotions included a buy-one-get-one-free in moderate suits, and sale-priced leather coats and shoes.

Overall, Fitzpatrick said, the men's side was "a little less promotional than a year ago." Among the top sellers were cashmere and sport coats. "Kenneth Cole and Hugo Boss have done well," said Fitzpatrick, "and our private label Tasso Elba suit business has been excellent." Fitzpatrick said two categories that didn't perform up to expectations were neckwear and dress shirts. "They've been strong all season and we thought they would have done a little bit better over the weekend."

Scott Manson, GMM of men's for Fresno, Calif.-based Gottschalks, is expecting holiday sales to be last-minute this year. "We've done our own math and we think it's going to be a very late Christmas based on 1999 -- which is the last time Thanksgiving and Christmas were laid out like this. We're not in any kind of panic. It's coming in pretty much the way we anticipated. The customers are going to wait because they've got extra days."

So far, customers are responding to "outdoor wear," he said. "Columbia, Woolrich -- we've had great results with anything from them, specifically sueded fleece and Polarfleece at price points from $ 29.99 to $ 49.99." He also said the popularity of the striped woven had finally started to wane. "It's not happening like we anticipated. I think the whole updated men's concept is not pulling off as the way we thought it would."

Despite the chilly temperatures, Manson said the surf segment is a hot seller with brands such as Billabong, Hurley and Quiksilver topping the shopping lists. "We're having excellent sell-throughs on surf hoodies," he said. In non-apparel, anything poker-related proved popular, with chips, card shufflers and Texas Hold 'Em game boards flying off the shelves.

Men's Wearhouse executive vice-president and GMM Doug Ewert said the chain had "tremendous success" with black suits, french-cuff dress shirts, leather coats, wrinkle-free cotton pants and knit shirts.

The Thanksgiving weekend capped a comparatively strong month for Seattle-based retailer Butch Blum. "We were up significantly over last year -- double digits," said Blum, who is expecting sales to continue to strengthen as the season progresses.

"We're selling outerwear well, we're selling casual pants and we're selling sweaters well -- all across the board." Blum also singled out sport coats as relatively strong.

Sport coats were also a bright spot for Sy Devore Menswear in Studio City, Calif. "I wasn't sure how they'd do, but they're exceeding my expectations," said vice-president Danny Marsh about soft-construction sport coats, noting that anything from Zegna or Coat was popular, along with "a little line out of Germany called Venturo." Marsh said that while interest in outerwear was up, "leathers have been a little soft." He characterized the overall tenor of business as "okay but not great" so far, but he's expecting sales to kick in soon.

At Alpha, a new men's gadget and gear boutique in Los Angeles, co-owner Darren Gold said cashmere was a hot seller, especially scarves and $ 300 to $ 400 sweaters by local designer Cristi Conaway. Also popular for cooler-weather wear were olive green and black bomber-style jackets by southern California line Looseleaf at $ 165.

Gold forecast that his store, which offers a tightly edited upscale collection of apparel, accessories and gifts, had yet to see its busiest shopping days of the season. "We'll be busier much closer to the edge," he said. "There are tons of people coming through the store getting ideas. I think we'll do a good business at the very last minute."

Does Santa ever accidentally drop his big bag of gifts? If so, does the bag start to smell of the many perfumes and colognes whose containers were broken in the fall?

We wouldn't be surprised. After all, fragrances are among the most-touted Christmas gifts, if not the most given.

So in the spirit of the season, Dressing Room offers its usual odoriferous roundup of suggested scents. Hang on to your seats.

Noted jewelry house Boucheron presents its first women's fragrance - Boucheron Femme - in a limited edition, keepsake jewel case. The scent includes notes of Sicilian mandarin, orange blossom, ylang-ylang, tuberose and jasmine. The 1.6-ounce bottle is $90.

Elizabeth Arden has once again produced a variety of gift sets featuring its various fragrances ... Provocative Woman, Red Door and Red Door Revealed, and Elizabeth Arden Green Tea. There's also an Elizabeth Arden World of Color Holiday Makeup Collection. Prices range from $39.50 to $55; a tote bag comes free with any $35 purchase. (Dillard's carries Elizabeth Arden and Boucheron products.) The Garden Botanika catalog includes "mix your own blend" scents, with a choice of up to three fragrance notes to create that custom gift. The buyer chooses a base scent, then selects one of two more fragrance notes to complement the first.

Notes are grouped in such categories as musks; warm and spicy; cool and crisp; fruits and florals. The cost is $28; custom body products are also offered. Call (800) 968-7842 or go to: www.gardenbotanika.com. Victoria's Secret Beauty offers the perfect little stocking-stuffer: The Bejeweled Beauties Lip Gloss/Fragrance Rollerballs. This double-ended beauty accessory features a shimmery lip gloss on one end and, on the other, one of the chain's best-selling fragrances. Visit a Victoria's Secret store and choose from Basic Instinct, Very Sexy For Her or Very Sexy For Her 2. These come in three colors for $18.50. Burberry Brit Red is a special edition fragrance "with an eccentric and playful British attitude," the news release about it says. The Oriental fragrance includes notes of green mandarin, jasmine, roses and vanilla. The fragrance is sold at select department stores. The 3.3-ounce bottle is $80, and Arkansans can get it via the Saks Fifth Avenue Web site, www.saksfifthavenue.com (do a search for "burberry brit red").

Smell great for less Want to save a few bucks? Absolute Fragrances is a familyowned, online designer fragrance boutique that sells more than 2,000 big-name perfumes and colognes for up to 60 percent off retail prices. Customers may also choose from UPS overnight or Express delivery. Free ground shipping is thrown in for purchases totaling more than $59.

Cartier's back!

Thanks to the perseverance of owner Mindy Stewart, Powder and Smoke - the elegant gift boutique in west Little Rock's Pavillion in the Park - now has Cartier fragrances. Cartier had not been in this market for more than 10 years, Stewart says. Among the nine men's and women's scents available: Must de Cartier, which starts at $62; Le Baiser du Dragon ("Kiss of the Dragon"), which starts at $80; and the award-winning So Pretty, which starts at $58.

Powder and Smoke also features Emanuel Ungaro's Apparition, described as "a lush blend of ripe berries and sizzling cayenne pepper layered over soft blossoms [and] drizzled with warm patchouli." A 1.7-ounce eau de parfum costs $78.

BODY:

LUDHIANA, India -- Everyday, as the 40-something Deepak Dumra walks into the facade of Greatway Private Limited in Ludhiana's dusty GT Road, someone in squeaky-clean Lancashire must be sneezing.

The Punjab township that has made its bones in the cut-throat global markets of the US and Europe is today avenging sweetly the former British textile capital which had long exploited Indian cotton only to sell it back as "finished products".

Mr Dumra, however, has little time for history. He'd rather write or knit it himself. For starters, Mr Dumra is a ready-made garment exporter whose produce -- cotton knit and woollen sweaters, under-garments, shirts, sweat shirts, and tops -- hit the high-street markets of the West.

But once his Greatway and Eveline brands cross the seas, they don some elite labels -- that of Tommy Hilfiger, Arrow, Izod, Nautica or Quick Silver. Ask Mr Dumra, he'll tell you he's more worried about Tirupur than dudes from Milan or Tuscany. With an annual turnover of Rs 80 crore that comes from the export of 1.6 million pieces of ready-made garments, his competitors may be Indian but the focus is clearly Westward.

"We cater to the high-end leisure market in Europe and the US, which is the biggest," says Mr Dumra. Greatway also supplies finished products to ITC's brand Wills but is not very keen on building its own retail set-up. The reason: high-end corporate selling tastes sweeter. "It's far easier, plus it brings in the volumes necessary for our survival," says Mr Dumra.

This two-generation old brand has travelled the road to success on the technical strength of its retainers and has come to be one of the few surviving garment manufacturing units in the city. "Sound technical knowledge of the industry and an awareness of global trends has seen us through the times," explains Mr Dumra, who has studied textile engineering in Leicester, UK, before joining his father's hosiery business in Ludhiana.

"My father studied textile engineering in Ludhiana during the British times. That time the city had a technical college at the old fort, which is in ruins now. The firm was into manufacturing of woollens till the early 1970s but the upswing in yarn prices made us shift to cotton in 1975 and we were one of the first in the industry to shift to computer-ised knitting in 1990s," says he.

The firm stayed put when the business migrated to other parts of the country. The Dumras saved the day thanks to a keen understanding of global trends and technology garnered during the stint abroad and the internal economies that came from vertical integration of the manufacturing processes.

"Everything, right from trial process to the packaging and branding, is done at our factory at Ludhiana," he adds. "Currently, we are planning to invest Rs 10-15 crore in technical up-gradation in the dyeing unit rather than going for capacity enhance-ment," says Mr Dumra who believes that "unless the Indian industry upgrades technology, there would be no acceptance in the world markets."

Mr Dumra is cautious about the post-quota scenario and bases his theory on the premise that China would stay unbeatable in the num-bers game. "China is much ahead of us. Their scale is unbelievable, they must have started planning for it 30 years ago. While they specialise in mass production, we can survive because of our creativity and the flexibility that the Chinese lack due to their scales. Smaller scales would give us much more flexibility and we can adapt ourselves according to the changing fashion. Overall, we, the people in this part of the country, have always been survivors," he beams.

Listing his competitive strength that comes from the flexible production facility, Mr Dumra explains: "The world of textiles is very competitive. We have eight to ten seasons now while earlier it was just two seasons. Fashion changes quickly and the demand is not need based, it has to be actually created. We are good at this." Well, it shows.

HEADLINE: A company to watch Fossil has gone from garage to $1 billion enterprise

BODY:

More fashion watches under the Christmas tree this year were probably made by Fossil Inc. than any other company.

At the end of its 20th year, the Richardson company has evolved into a $1 billion enterprise with sights on doubling in five years.

Fossil designs, markets, manufactures and distributes watches in 90 countries for brands including Burberry, Diesel, Emporio Armani and DKNY.

Fossil-made watches are sold in more than 20,500 U.S. stores ranging from discounter Wal-Mart, which carries a $10 model, to luxury retailer Neiman Marcus and jeweler Bailey Banks & Biddle, which sell a $2,500 Michele brand.

While Fossil can deliver a large slice of the U.S. market, prospects elsewhere are helping it broaden its collection of brands.

The global watch business is estimated to be about $20 billion a year, with only $6 billion in the United States.

"They really are the leaders in a big business that's even bigger outside the U.S., and they've invested in a global infrastructure that maybe no one else has," said Ozarslan Tangun, director of research at Southwest Securities Inc. in Dallas.

Fossil's international business, which represents about 55 percent of total sales, is growing faster than its U.S. business.

Tempus International Corp., the Miami owner of hot MW and Michele watch brands, was courted by a number of companies, but it chose Fossil in March.

Last month, Adidas-Salomon Group signed an agreement with Fossil to produce and distribute athletic watches worldwide by early 2006.

"These are the kinds of brands that have global recognition, and we can take their watch business anywhere. And from a worldwide perspective, a brand like Michele has legs and can be successful in handbags, jewelry and eyewear," said Randy Kercho, Fossil's executive vice president over finance and operations.

Owning the start-to-finish operation allows Fossil to significantly shorten the time it takes to deliver a product and improve its profit margins, Mr. Kercho said.

In April, American designer Michael Kors granted Fossil the license to make his watches, and they were in stores by fall.

Fossil owns three manufacturing plants in China and one in Switzerland. It has centralized distribution facilities in Dallas and Germany, with plans to open one in Asia by 2007. It also has offices, warehouses and distribution facilities in Europe, Asia and Australia.

Profit and sales have been rising about 20 percent a year.

Other accessories

The company doesn't rely solely on the watch business. It also sells a range of accessories such as handbags and sunglasses.

Eric Beder, a senior equity analyst at JB Hanauer & Co. who covers competitor Guess Inc., said accessories are a hot category.

"People like to buy fashion watches, handbags and accessories. It's a great way for people to differentiate themselves," he said.

The company expanded into leather goods in 1992, sunglasses in 1995 and apparel in 2000. In Europe, it's selling Emporio Armani- and Fossil-branded jewelry.

In 1996, it opened company-owned stores in high-traffic travel locations such as resorts and airports and added stores in shopping malls. It now has 137 locations.

Mike L. Kovar, the chief financial officer, said the company is testing a smaller Fossil store and a new concept called the Modern Watch Company, which sells watches made by Fossil and its competitors.

Fossil's domestic sales declined this year, but Wall Street seems to agree with Mr. Kovar's assessment that it's a cyclical issue.

In the under-$150 fashion watch business, Fossil, Guess and the Swatch Group remain the dominant players, analysts said.

Guess is also testing an accessories-only store, Mr. Beder said. And Swatch already operates more than 500 stores.

Movado Group Inc., based in Paramus, N.J., is smaller, with revenue of about $400 million this year, and it has the license to make watches for Coach.

Timex is probably the biggest U.S. watchmaker. Sales of the privately held company are estimated at $800 million. It makes Nautica, Guess and Versace watches.

Swiss company Swatch, with revenue of more than $2.5 billion, makes brands including Swatch and Flik Flak and the premium-priced Longines and Omega.

Longtime employees don't underestimate Fossil's ability to grow.

"When I joined the company in 1992, we had $70 million in sales," Mr. Kercho said.

Swatch stumbled in the United States for several years, and many have been waiting for Fossil to suffer a similar fate, Mr. Kercho said.

"It's remarkable what we've been able to do," he said.

Humble beginning

The chairman, Tom Kartsotis, 44, started the business in a garage office on Forest Lane. His brother, Kosta N. Kartsotis, 51, joined the business later and is president and chief executive.

Tim Hale, a 17-year Fossil veteran, is now senior vice president, overseeing more than 100 designers. He started working with Tom Kartsotis as a freelancer in 1985.

"Back then, the first watches we developed reflected our romanticizing of that post-World War II period. We had a penchant for that period of Americana," he said.

He recalled how Mr. Kartsotis found a tin at a French flea market and decided tin boxes would become Fossil's signature packaging.

"It gave us a platform," Mr. Hale said. "We're still designing from a fashion perspective with a retrospective attitude."

The Kartsotis brothers haven't granted an interview since before the company went public in 1993. A $1,000 investment held then would be worth $15,000 today.

The brothers stay in the background to keep the products in the foreground, said John Irvin, president of J.C. Penney Co.'s catalog and Internet operations. He was Kosta Kartsotis' boss years ago at Dallas-based Sanger Harris.

HEADLINE: Only 48 hours left Tips for last minute shoppers on where to go and what to buy

BYLINE: Matt Paoellelli, Daily Herald Correspondent

BODY:

As throngs of bargain hunters rushed out to begin their holiday shopping the day after Thanksgiving, you sat at home and laughed. Isn't it a little early to start shopping for Christmas? Why deal with all of the lines and the traffic? Besides, you were going to buy all of your gifts online this year.

Unfortunately for you, time flies.

Now, it's two days before Christmas, it's too late to start any online shopping and you still don't have anything to give your mother-in-law when you show up for Christmas dinner.

But, fear not gift-giving procrastinators. You still have 48 hours and lots of options - provided you don't put it off any longer.

Today is the best day to catch up with everyone else, as major malls such as Randhurst Shopping Center in Mount Prospect and Woodfield Shopping Center in Schaumburg have extended holiday hours, giving you one last chance to browse through a myriad of stores for that perfect gift.

But, plan to spend 15 minutes looking for a parking space and don't expect to have the mall to yourself. It seems procrastination is a common problem.

"The myth that the busiest day of the year is the day after Thanksgiving is not true," said Marc Strich, general manager of Woodfield. "The busiest days are usually the days leading up to Christmas and the last weekend right before the holidays."

To avoid the evening rush, Strich recommends shopping as early as possible, even if you just want to purchase a mall gift certificate for those family members with indecipherable tastes.

"Our gift certificate business is up significantly this year, so if someone is planning to get gift certificates, I would buy them as soon as possible," Strich said. "It's a great last-minute gift because of all the specials that are going on right after the holidays, so people have been lining up for them."

By Christmas Eve, almost every major store will be closed by 6 p.m., with Wal-Mart and Big Kmart remaining open until 8 p.m. at certain locations.

If you manage to keep procrastinating until then, you'll have to resort to the last-minute shopper's final oasis-the nearest 24-hour convenience store.

Although it may not seem like the ideal place to pick up Christmas presents, Walgreens Pharmacy has more to offer than people expect, said Pat DiSarno, district manager of Chicago and Northwest suburban Walgreens stores.

"We range from electric razors to women's perfume to the latest DVDs," he said. "Usually, our sales peak on Christmas Eve and Christmas Day because we're the only store that's open."

If you don't want family and friends to know you've waited until the eleventh hour to buy their presents, Walgreens sells gift certificates for businesses such as Borders Books and Music, AMC Theatre, and the Olive Garden restaurant.

"If all else fails and you want to give out money, we've got a nice cash card you can put it on and it makes you look good," DiSarno said.

When Christmas has come and gone, you can rest easy in the knowledge that everyone on your list received a gift.

But, don't miss the after-Christmas sales - it's never too soon to start shopping for next year.

Top 10 last-minute gifts

It's Christmas Day, you're on your way to a holiday gathering, and then it hits you - you forgot to buy someone a gift. What can you do?

A rose from a gas station won't do. Since all Walgreens stores will be open 24 hours, including Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, Daily Herald Correspondent Matt Paolelli stopped in to the Des Plaines store to see what gift options there were (don't forget to pick up gift wrap and tape):

- Deluxe Poker Set, $29.99. Prepare your loved ones for the World Series of Poker with this beginner's set that includes 200 chips, two decks of cards and an aluminum carrying case.
- HoverCopter, $19.99. As seen on TV, this radio-controlled flying saucer can fly over 30-feet high. For children ages eight and up, the toy can be safely used indoors and recharges with the included AC adapter.
- HoMedics Shiatsu Massaging Cushion, $99.99. For anyone on your list who spends their day sitting behind a desk, this kneading cushion is easily attachable to office chairs and has three settings for upper, lower or full back massages.
- The Sopranos Trivia Game, $9.99. This board game is sure to be a hit for fans of the popular HBO show. Similar games for Sex and the City, Law and Order and CSI are also available.
- Sony CD Walkman, $59.99. It's no iPod, but teens will love this portable compact disc player that includes skip protection and plays CD-R and CD-RW formats.
- Nautica For Men, $29.99. This gift set for the men on your list features cologne spray and splash-on aftershave. The price tag is also much lower than it would be in a department store.
- Russell Stover Candy, $7.99. The perfect gift for the family member who is hosting Christmas dinner this year, these one-pound boxes of candy come in dark chocolate, caramel and other assortments.

- Dr. Scholl's Toe Touch Foot Spa, $12.99. With settings for heat, bubbles, massage or all three, this contraption is great for someone who spends all day on their feet or doesn't get to the spa as often as they might like.

- Chia Shrek, $15.99. It's the classic Chia Pet pottery plant made trendy for a new generation of kids. The kit features a decorative planter and enough seeds to "watch it grow" three times.

- Gift Cards for numerous stores, $10, $25 or $50. Walgreens offers gift cards for numerous other businesses including AMC Theatres, Corner Bakery Cafe, Maggiano's Little Italy, Chili's, Blockbuster and Toys R Us. Phone cards are also available.

GRAPHIC: schshop-2ne112604dw If you've procrastinated about buying your Christmas gifts, then your only option might be to fight the crowds at Woodfield Shopping Center. The mall is open until 11 p.m. tonight and from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. Friday. Daniel White/Daily Herald shoprand-1ne112803jl With only two days until Christmas, there won't be time to leisurely browse for gifts in store after store. Better show up at the mall with a pre-thought-out list. Joe Lewnard/Daily Herald

How cute are you? Wrap up in a cozy, sweet robe with fun pajamas and slippers and be fashionably comfortable.

The NCAA lets bowls give swag worth up to $ 350. What the players get--and how they like it

BYLINE: Edited by Kostya Kennedy

BODY:

MPC COMPUTERS BOWL, Dec. 27 Fresno State vs. Virginia * Boise, Idaho Haul: Blue parka, football, backpack, blue wool skull cap, Mediasonic MV600 ETC digital camcorder

"Any gift bag with a camcorder is good," said Fresno State sophomore cornerback Marcus McCauley, whose Bulldogs received a lot of clothing at last year's Silicon Valley Football Classic. "It's good timing. I was looking into getting a camcorder and was thinking about saving the per diem we get from the bowl to buy one. Weird how that worked out." SI PLAYERS RATING: [3 gifts]

HOLIDAY BOWL, Dec. 30 California vs. Texas Tech * San Diego Haul: Tommy Hilfiger watch, fleece jacket, Mintek portable DVD player, twill cap

At last year's Insight Bowl, Cal players got a Sony digital camera, a Bulova watch and a blanket. "This year's stuff is better," says defensive back Donnie McCleskey (left), a junior from Chino, Calif., who was nonetheless envious when he heard what the Fiesta Bowl participants are getting. "You can't complain but... everybody likes an iPod." SI PLAYERS RATING: [3 gifts]

FIESTA BOWL, Jan. 1 Utah vs. Pittsburgh * Tempe, Ariz. Haul: iPod mini, silver Bulova watch, Nike nylon drawstring bag with Frito-Lay products

Utah defensive end Kite Afeaki has been in the market for an iPod for some time. "Ever since I first saw it," the 22-year-old says. "Man, to get it for free ... I'm married, I got two kids, I got another on the way--I was thinking about buying one for myself, but there was no way in hell I was going to be able to afford it." What's the first song the junior plans to download? "Bob Marley's Pimper's Paradise. I'd love to load it up with all the reggae I can." SI PLAYERS RATING: [4 gifts]

SUGAR BOWL, Jan. 3 Auburn vs. Virginia Tech * New Orleans Haul: Silver Nokia watch, Weber Baby Q Gas grill, APEX portable DVD player

Even with a grill in the offing, Tech DE Darryl Tapp (right) looks back longingly at the '02 San Francisco Bowl, when he got a Fossil watch and an MP3 player. "That was stuff I really wanted, plus it was my first bowl. I didn't know we'd get stuff like that, so it was a shock." Tapp still wears the Fossil watch, and he gave the Bulova he got at last year's Insight Bowl to his mother. Who'll get this year's wrist piece? Says the junior, "I don't know. It depends if I like it or not." SI PLAYERS RATING: [4 gifts]

ALAMO BOWL, Dec. 29 Ohio State vs. Oklahoma State * San Antonio Haul: Long gray-blue woolen jacket, Oakley Crush 2.0 watch, black Bishop fleece pullover, mini Alamo Bowl helmet, sling bag, video games (ESPN College Hoops and NBA 2K5)

Beware I-35 drivers: Oklahoma State safety Vernon Grant (above) uses the portable DVD player he got at the 2003 Cotton Bowl each time he makes the four-hour drive home to Duncanville, Texas. "I plug it in my car, pop a movie in and I'm on my way," says the 5'9", 180-pound junior, who had hoped for either a camcorder or an iPod this year. "Aw, man," he said upon learning of the Alamo gift list. "We're gonna have to get that iPod next year then." SI Players Rating: [2 gifts]

SUN BOWL, Dec. 31 Purdue vs. Arizona State * El Paso Haul: Silvertone analog watch, Armor Gear backpack, Sahara black cotton mock turtleneck, Sahara short sleeve shirt, two baseball caps, Vitalis hair dryer, commemorative coin, commemorative keychain, disposable camera

"How exciting do the gifts sound? Want my hair dryer?" asks Purdue's senior QB Kyle Orton (left). "I just like getting the rings Purdue gives us. I give those to my dad, who keeps them stored away. I was hoping for an iPod, but the better the bowl, the better the gifts." Ouch. SI PLAYERS RATING: [1 gift]

OUTBACK BOWL, Jan. 1 Wisconsin vs. Georgia * Tampa Haul: Gold ring with blue stone and fake diamonds, silver Nautica watch, football with team logos, baseball cap, GPX CD player

"We always get watches, so it's nice to finally get a ring," says Wisconsin defensive back Scott Starks (right), who received wrist candy at the 2003 Music City Bowl and 2002 Alamo Bowl. "It's not really free stuff because we work hard to get there, but it's a nice little pat on a back. We're getting stuff we need, but I'll probably give these things to my parents and family as Christmas gifts--that way I won't have to spend any money." SI PLAYERS RATING: [2 gifts]

ORANGE BOWL, Jan. 4 USC vs. Oklahoma * Miami Haul: Sony digital camera/recorder, Fossil watch and wallet, Nike small rolling duffel bag, commemorative mini helmet, Orange Bowl hat, team picture plaque

"I asked my family for a wallet for Christmas--I guess I should tell them not to get it for me anymore," says USC senior guard Travis Watkins, who regularly uses the watch and backpack he got at last year's Rose Bowl. "This stuff is not going to collect dust around me. I'll definitely use the camera--all I have is a 35-millimeter at home." SI PLAYERS RATING: [3 gifts]

Players score big with game freebies

DATELINE: ATLANTA

BODY:

Bowl etiquette used to be simple enough.

Take the trip. Take the souvenir ring--or souvenir watch or souvenir snow globe of El Paso. Play the game. Go home. Gloat.

But life in the age of bling is not so elementary. All around the country this week the traditional ceremonial rings and watches are being doled out. But so are DVD players, iPods and digital camcorders.

One-upsmanship used to extend to bowl purses and TV exposure; now it includes gifts that hospitality committees bestow upon the visiting conquerors. The NCAA, which spends 51 weeks a year dictating what players may not receive, has a separate set of regulations about what they may lug home after any of the 28 sanctioned Division I bowl games.

"Yeah, you can adjust to it real quick," University of Florida center Mike Degory said.

Each player from Florida and Miami, gathered in Atlanta for Friday's Chick-fil-A Peach Bowl, has been given an Xbox, Microsoft's popular computer game system, with a couple of video games. The players also received Peach Bowl Windshirts, Peach Bowl souvenir footballs and Chick-fil-A calendars--purportedly the best-selling calendar in the country with its $30 in Chick-fil-A coupons.

And, of course, there's the watch--but not a toss-in-the-drawer-and-forget-it watch. The Peach Bowl watch is from Fossil, the noted Dallas-based maker of collectibles and accessories.

The NCAA says it has a handle on all this giving. Bowls may spend no more than $350 per gift pack (for years the limit was $300), and no more than 125 gift packs may be distributed to each team.

Bowls also must furnish detailed reports of expenditures on hospitality. Before the first free meal is served or the first hospitality suite is unlocked, the bowl committees may have spent at least $1.2 million on trinkets for players.

If that sounds excessive, consider the players' perspective.

"We deserve it," Florida linebacker Travis Harris said. "We work real hard. We earn a lot of money for our schools. We don't get paid or anything. So these gifts, a lot of them I give to my family at Christmastime. It's special, something I always look forward to every year."

Most bowls know what the others are offering. The Football Bowl Association has yearly meetings for such information-swapping.

The FedEx Orange Bowl is giving Sony digital cameras this year. The Nokia Sugar Bowl is handing out Weber Baby Q gas grills. Plus both Sugar Bowl teams get outings at New Orleans' Rock 'N' Bowl, a specialized bowling alley that defines Big Easy hip.

Georgia Tech scored big not only on the Champs Sports Bowl scoreboard last week but also on the free stuff. Each player received a portable video camera, a DVD player, a watch and souvenir apparel.

In Tampa, the Georgia Bulldogs get Outback Bowl GPX CD players, silver Nautica watches, caps, footballs and gold Outback Bowl rings. The rings, with blue stones and faux diamonds, are valued at $185 each.

NCAA rules dictate that gift items may not be resold. And even though the schools and the NCAA monitor eBay offerings for bowl paraphernalia, the souvenir market is always a temptation.
