Re: New 2010 gmci yenko camaro

hhhhhhmmmmmm... looking for a cut or keeping history as history ?

That would be cool seeing these cars on the street though ☺

The family did however authorize the syc to do this more than a decade ago!

GMCI does not have the approval nor the endorsement of the Yenko family, in order to use the Yenko name for anything, much less a 2010 Yenko Camaro.

Representatives of GMCI contacted us to inquire about building 5th generation Yenko Camaros. We clearly stated that if the family as well as the club did not support their project that we would not even bother to submit the proposal which they requested.

The path they have chosen is very clear.

This morning I was informed that the Yenko family is extremely distraught over this issue and for the first time since Don Yenko, passed, they have retained a Law Firm to defend and protect their interests.

I would think it paramount that any such project should have the blessing and/or endorsement of the Yenko heirs!

JMHO.

Very Well put Stefano. I'm sure the YENKO heirs must feel like they have had their last name stolen from them. I feel whomever builds the 2010 YENKO camaro should have 100% support from the family as it is Rightfully thier name.

I'd go a step further and say that the Yenko family should be the ones to produce and "own" the company, not just some "licensee".

Support from a single family member is not much if they are not in ownership of the company making them.

What if "GMCI" just pays another family member to "support" their efforts?

Which family member is the "Legitimate" Yenko heir?

IMO, they need to just let this die and produce the "GMCI" or "Clary" Supercar.

After the lawsuits start flying, who's gonna take a chance a pay a premium anyway?

All this money being spent so one guy can have his 2010 Yenko camaro. Childish. I hope the smart people understand the car should have NEVER been built without Hope and the 2 daughters signing contracts, giving their input on design and getting $$$ for the name which was never done.

Rich and Tim both make good points. Bottom line is, I would never want to own one.

Re: New 2010 gmci yenko camaro

Personally, I think it's good that the Yenko family may be getting involved and if they back the sYc / Nickey built Camaro's, so be it. To me, it's better than a marketing co that has had very little hobbyist involvement.

Tom C has done a lot over the years to support not only Yenko's but other supercars and if anyone deserves the opportunity to build the car Tom and Rob would be good stewards of the project. JMO
