Stripes, emblems, Billet wheels, sYc headrests and floormats. Yep, I think that qualifies it as a real Yenko

Re: New 2010 gmci yenko camaro

I'd hope that they do some performance mods in order to call it a yenko. They better at least put the LS7 in it...

I will say that the artist's rendering looked pretty cool.

2010 GMCI Yenko Chevrolet Camaro SS⁹ Prototype

Building on the 2010 Chevrolet Camaro SS as a basis is a surefire recipe to end up with a hot car, as even the stock version is sold well ahead of production. But for this Yenko GMCI has gone and added a significant set of upgrades, including a 600-horsepower supercharged output rating, high-performance Tremec six-speed manual and Hurst short shifter, plus a six-piston big brake kit. Key appearance upgrades include 22-inch alloy wheels, Yenko leather interior and custom Yenko graphics. This is just the Phase I kit; Phase II and Phase III cars are also planned.

A Phase III Yenko Camaro? That just sounds plain wrong.

Motion Phase III Camaro was used in the 60's as well as the new ones.

Side stripe still needs some work, but looks much better than some of the other "Yenko" 2010 clone stripes. I wonder if a 70 type motion stripe would look better on the 2010's?

Re: New 2010 gmci yenko camaro

One of the problems with making a new Yenko Camaro is that nobody knows what Don would have done with them.

Don was very creative and did his own drawings of cars and airplanes. There are some drawings of 1970s Camaros and Vegas that Don did using a very different looking wide stripe that was done in sections. It ran down the hood and across the door.

The 69 stripe design is great but I doubt Don would re-use it on a 2010 Camaro. Yenke would probably want to create a new stripe design such as he did on the Stinger, 1969 Yenkos, 70 Deuce Nova, Stinger Vega, and 81 Turbo Z.

Don did some cool looking race car stripe designs also.

Re: New 2010 gmci yenko camaro

The "Yenko" family, who are the direct heirs of Don Yenke and his Estate, have never relinquished ownership of their name, nor have they ever sold it off or licensed it to GMCI.

They have NEVER authorized any individual or entity other than the "SYC", aka The Yenke Sports Car Club/Yenke.net to use it in order to promote and/or perpetuate Don's legacy.

The family did however authorize the SYC to do this more than a decade ago!

GMCI does not have the approval nor the endorsement of the Yenke family, in order to use the Yenke name for anything, much less a 2010 Yenke Camaro.

Representatives of GMCI contacted us to inquire about building 5th generation Yenke Camaros. We clearly stated that if the family as well as the club did not support their project that we would not even bother to submit the proposal which they requested.

The path they have chosen is very clear.

This morning I was informed that the Yenke family is extremely distraught over this issue and for the first time since Don Yenke, passed, they have retained a Law Firm to defend and protect their interests.

I would think it paramount that any such project should have the blessing and/or endorsement of the Yenke heirs!

JMHO.
