Best to hire a trademark or paten attorney or consult with one. They will tell you everything you need to know and where to look to find expiration status, etc. I believe the way it works is if they are not actively using the trademark or patent it is up for grabs after a certain length of time.

Hmm, that's an angle I never thought of. I always just assumed they owned it from here on out. But maybe they don't. I'll ask Jeff Naugle about that.

Yea. I practically grew up there having lived a mile or so from the one in Riverside at Brockton and 14th. Loved the green burritos and fries. We were always broke so we often ordered the all-cheese burritos. Otherwise, you got the double wrap macho burrito or the naugleburger. Oh, and the chocolate shakes rocked! The receipts had a little cartoon character brief message at the bottom that read "Dick Naugles says" and then there would be a little note about the food or something related. It was open late night, as was the one on the other end of town so it became the popular cruise night hang and "turnaround" spot. It would be great timing to resurrect the brand. In this economy people are all about eating cheap, especially if it's good. Also, there's the historical factor that would resonate with many generations of past customers. Great idea!

But interestingly enough the friend I rode out there with asked one of the employees if she knew what it used to be before it was a Del Taco and she said, "Yeah, I get a bunch of people coming through the drive-thru every single day telling me it used to be a place called 'Naugles.' I'm getting kind of tired of them talking about it." They also didn't know what the combo cup was there and didn't know that the bun taco was originally a Naugles item.

Well, I'm thinking that any location that used that architecture probably did have the lanterns when it was a Naugles. The location at Brookhurst and Hamilton has little orange flags in their place now, or at least it did. But the lawyers want to find every possible use that Del Taco makes of the name "Naugles" so we can have a very clear cut idea of the complete extent of their usage. They realize we would never be able to go to every Del Taco location but if somebody could make it to the original Naugles location and see if perhaps they have hanging on a wall inside a picture of what it used to look like as Naugles then we would know that that is one instance of their usage, even if it's only a small one. But if I get there and see, as I suspect to be the case, that that they have completely abandoned anything Naugles-related at even the original flagship Naugles location then that will be a good indicator that it is the same at every other location and leave their usage at the one bare-bones mention of Naugles on their website, which would then strengthen the case to move ahead with a cancellation of trademark proceeding.

So it seems he wants to be associated by name only. If this is the case, you should be president of the corporation. Look at it as sort of a licensing of the "his" naugles names from a credibility standpoint. Same as when wolfgang puck lends his name to the many offshoots of "puck" restaurants. After creating the corp, the next step is to obtain operating capitol. This would normally be fairly easy given the popularity and renewed interest in the naugles brand, but institutional lending is not what it once was due to the global economic economy. However, providing the legal collateral for the naugles name will standup in court I feel strongly that we can obtain the funding to at least open the first restaurant. Let me know how things progress.

I like the idea of jeff being named as plaintiff. Have you looked into drawing up corp paperwork yet? Maybe Naugles, Inc. ask the attorney if proceeding with a corp name like this is smart idea when representing jeff as plaintiff or if it really matters. The new corp can have a board of directors, maybe listing jeff as president, you as vp, etc. for the record, i'm obviously interested in being on board as well.

Confirmed my suspicion that that was the only thing they were going off of, even though I thought my suspicion was almost too silly to really consider. But I have been talking with a trademark attorney, and though he is reluctant to guarantee anything, he seems very confident that that instance of Del Taco's usage of "Naugles" is far from enough to prove that they are still conducting a restaurant business with the Naugles name. He says, "The bottom line is if a trademark applicant has 'restaurant' on their goods and services, and they are no longer using any restaurants using that name, that would be a good basis to move forward with a cancellation."

That's fine. Thursday's likely to be a little better than Wednesday but just let me know what works for you and Noah. Thanks.

Hi, Christian,
Thanks for the call!
Noah's been pretty busy, so hard to pin down for a day but I'm trying for next Wed/Thursday....Will get back to you as soon as I know.
Thanks,
Barbara

Hi Barbara,

I don't know if you ever presented the idea of bringing a Naugles sub-menu back to the Del Taco marketing team but people are still very interested in it. I normally get 30 - 40 hits a day from people looking for Naugles info but at this point today it has already well exceeded that amount due to links in comments left on an entry at Nancy's blog. With the nostalgia factor that is driving business so heavily at places like Bob's Big Boy and Farrell's this could be a huge selling point for Del Taco and would require little in the way of new ingredients needing to be stocked or whatever. Nancy's story on Jack in the Box bringing back a 30-yr. old burger has itself been getting a ton of traffic and was the #1 most viewed story on the Register website for a while.

Trying not to be a pest over this but my blog is the one spot where interest in Naugles can be gaged and I can tell that it is high. If it's out of the question then it's out of the question but I'd hate to see Del Taco miss an easy and profitable opportunity with public interest already so acute in a property Del already owns.

I'll have to check.... last time I talked about this with the marketing dept. there wasn't an account open...
Hope all is well your way!

Hey, Christian,
I was actually just curious as to what this is about and why you might be interested in seeing the Naugles trademark become public domain. And of course, you can imagine I would want to know if you will be blogging about the petition! :) Certainly don't want to cause any issues for you or your attorneys!

Take care,
Barbara

Received the following e-mail from my lawyer:

> So you know, we (Knobbe) won't be able to communicate with a Del Taco employee without Del Taco's attorneys on the phone as well. This falls under ethical rules of conduct for attorneys.

In anything I do I try my best to create a positive outcome for everyone involved (I don't have a "there has to be losers so there can be winners" mentality) so I don't want anybody here zinged for "breach of ethics" or whatever. There may be a gray area if you are not technically considered a Del Taco employee, although I'm guessing you're close to enough to being one to count as one in this particular case . . . I guess. So the best I can say now is if you still have a few questions and are okay with e-mailing them I will see what I can do, but am not in the position to guarantee anything.

Hey Barbara,

Been really busy. Have attorneys handling Naugles so they may want to be involved.

Hope all is well.

Christian

p.s. saw that you also recently became friends with Brooke on Facebook; i've known her for a long time (and we share the same birthday) and am also friends with her husband Joe

Still doing my web development and blog writing. Have had a number of people lately tell me they've been going to Del Taco and that they took advantage of the gift card promotion over Christmas.

Hi Barbara,

I accepted your friend request on Facebook but when I did I think it erased a message you had sent along with it about needing models for some trade show. I might be able to put out a tweet about it if I got more details.

Congratulations on your new position at Del Taco!

Hi Noah,

Barbara Caruso one time said I was supposed to meet with you over lunch. If that has changed that is fine but if it's still open then I'm still willing to come in. I have some ideas I think would be great for Del Taco's marketing. I am contacting you directly because neither me nor Nancy Luna at The Orange County Register has heard from Barbara in a while.

Sincerely,

Christian Ziebarth
