APPLICANT’S REQUEST TO SUSPEND APPEAL AND REMAND APPLICATION TO EXAMINER FOR CONSIDERATION OF ADDITIONAL EVIDENCE

Applicant Loops, LLC (“Applicant”) hereby requests suspension of the appeal and remand of Application Serial No. 85/203,745 (the “Application”) to the Examining Attorney to consider additional evidence pursuant to TBMP § 1207.02 (the “Request”). The new evidence consists of the following (the “Evidence”):

- Hernando Today article about the rights of inmates to possess dental floss citing “Floss Loops.”
- Associated Press article about Jailer concerns regarding inmate possession of dental floss discussing “Floss Loops.”
- Seattle Times article about safety concerns regarding inmate possession of dental floss discussing “Floss Loops.”
- Florida inmate approved product list from 2001 and 2003 listing “Floss Loops.”
- “Floss” English slang definition.

I. STANDARD FOR REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION AND REMAND

A request for suspension and remand must be filed prior to the Board’s final decision on the appeal, and must include a showing of good cause for the request. See In re Max Capital

Group Ltd., 93 USPQ2d 1243, 1244 n.4 (TTAB 2010); 37 CFR § 4.142(d); TBMP § 1207.02.

One proper basis for a good cause showing is the existence of relevant evidence that was not previously available to for inclusion in the record. Id. As noted below, Applicant has provided relevant, and previously unavailable, evidence with this Request.

ARGUMENT

II. The Request Is Timely Filed and Supported by Good Cause

The Evidence consists of news articles about prison safety and the use of inmate possession of dental floss which were unavailable prior to Applicant's Notice of Appeal. Applicant further did not become aware of the publication of the articles until after Applicant's Appeal Brief was filed on December 21, 2012. Accordingly, this Request is being timely filed early in the appeal process, at least before the Examining Attorney has filed a brief on the merits. Thus, the resources of neither the Examining Attorney, nor the Board, will be wasted by granting the request.

Further, the Request is being filed at the earliest point possible, following availability and Applicant's awareness of the Evidence. In order to produce the Florida inmate approved products lists, Applicant was required to review hard copies of business records from at least the previous eleven years in order to locate said products lists. This administrative task of reviewing more than 10 years of business records was time consuming and burdensome. Thus, the Evidence was entirely unavailable to Applicant prior to the appeal.

For these reasons, Applicant's Request is timely filed and good cause exists for granting the request. As such, Applicant respectfully requests that the Board remand the Application to the Examining Attorney for consideration of the Evidence.

III. The Evidence supports registration of the Application

The Evidence consists largely of unsolicited media coverage which clearly demonstrates the acquired distinctiveness of Applicant's mark of "Floss Loops" as a source identifier. In particular, the Associated Press article published October 25, 2012, discusses how the Deputy Commissioner of the Westchester County Jail in Valhalla, NY purchased a supply of Applicant's "Floss Loops" in response to 11 prisoners filing a lawsuit demanding access to dental floss. The article goes on to state that, "In California, the state approves Floss Loops. Regular floss can be used as a garrote.” Clearly from the article it can be understood that the State of California approves the use of Applicant’s product and not simply dental floss. The very next sentence distinguishes Applicant’s product from “Regular floss.” This combined with the additional evidence of acquired distinctiveness already of record supports the registration of the application.

IV. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Evidence strongly supports Applicant’s arguments against refusal of the Application. Because the Evidence (a) is relevant to the determination of registration of the mark, (b) was not previously available, and (c) is being submitted via a timely filed request for remand supported by good cause, the Board should suspend the appeal and remand the application to the Examining Attorney for consideration of the Evidence. The same is respectfully requested.

Respectfully submitted,

Is dental floss a right?

By Angel Castillo Jr.

Because we live in an advanced democracy where anyone can claim grievances in court, judges often get presented with unusual requests. For instance, does a jail inmate have a constitutional right to be provided dental floss?

Six recent inmate lawsuits filed in Florida and New York are raising such a novel claim.

In Florida, five inmates have separately sued Palm Beach County Sheriff Ric Bradshaw in federal court, claiming deprivation of federally protected civil rights through the denial of dental floss. "I don't care if they file 400 suits, they're not getting it," Bradshaw has pledged.

Similarly, a group of 11 inmates at the Westchester County jail in Valhalla, New York, just north of White Plains, sued the county in September for $500 million in damages in federal court in Manhattan.

One of the Florida plaintiffs, inmate Joel Flores, 22, alleged that Bradshaw's anti-floss policy is preventing him from complying with the oral hygiene recommendations of the American Dental Association.

The lack of dental floss, Flores alleges, "is causing me oral abscesses, pain, discomfort, tooth decay, loss of teeth and could contribute to endocarditis by plaque traveling through the gums into the bloodstream and accumulating in my heart, which causes a bacterial infection, and can lead to death."

In two of the other lawsuits against Bradshaw, U.S. Magistrate Judge Patrick A. White quickly dismissed the floss claims this month. He concluded that the denial of floss "is not a constitutional violation."

The danger of dental floss, according to jail officials such as Bradshaw, is that it can be used to strangle another inmate or a guard, braid a rope for escaping or even cut through prison bars.

However, Florida's state prison officials say that they have found a solution. At the state's prison canteens they sell to inmates "security oriented floss loops." A 30-loop bag costs $2.26, said Ann V. Howard, communications director for the Florida Department of Corrections.

In contrast to traditional string and nylon floss, the "Floss Loops Safety Dental Floss" is designed to break easily, can't be made into a rope, can't be used to pick locks or handcuffs, and can't be used as a weapon or a saw, according to the manufacturer. Each safety loop consists of a pair of parallel rubbery floss strands extending between a pair of grips. The loops require using both of the flosser's hands to hold the grips while the floss is inserted between the teeth, and the process almost looks like flossing with a rubber band.

Prodded by the inmates' lawsuit, officials at the Westchester County Department of Correction have announced that inmate-safe floss loops will be sold at the jail commissary for $2.08 for a bag of 30. The lawsuit is still pending, however.

Even if the inmates do not have a constitutional right to dental floss, it can hardly be a huge hardship for the Palm Beach County Jail to sell the safety floss loops to inmates who want to practice good dental hygiene.

Maybe they will smile more.

Jailers worry about dental floss as a weapon

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Dental floss may prevent toothaches, but it's given jailers plenty of headaches.

When a group of New York prisoners sued last month to demand access to dental floss, officials said they had to consider "security issues." As it turns out, jail — and jailbreak — history is tightly tangled with the stringy decay fighter.

In Texas, officials believe a prisoner used floss to cut his way out of his cell, then jumped a fellow inmate and knifed him to death.

In Maryland, Illinois, West Virginia and Wisconsin, inmates collected enough floss to braid it into ropes and escape, or try to, over prison walls.

A group of escaped prisoners on the run in Texas used floss to sew up their gunshot wounds.

And a man in an Illinois jail used floss to stitch together the dummy he left in his bed when he took off.

Experts say floss, or the plastic holder it sometimes comes in, has been used to strangle enemies, to escape, to saw through bars, to pick handcuffs, to make a hand grip on a shank and to hoist contraband from one level of cells to another.

"These inmates can make a weapon out of a chewing gum wrapper," said Steven Kayser, whose company sells a floss product advertised as prison-safe. "Floss is right up there on the danger list."

Officials at the Westchester County Jail in Valhalla were somewhat leery when 11 inmates, acting without a lawyer, filed a $500 million lawsuit demanding access to dental floss.

Lead plaintiff Santiago Gomez said the jail was "violating inmates' federally protected civil rights by not allowing inmates access to dental floss, while acknowledging that it will result in cavities if you fail to floss your teeth."

He said the inmates had been brushing three times a day, "tongue and gums included," but were still getting cavities, bleeding gums, enduring constant tooth drilling and mental anguish.

Deputy Commissioner Justin Pruyn said the jail is not required to supply floss to inmates and said floss posed security concerns. But the jail has since brought in a supply of Kayser's "Floss Loops" — circles of rubbery floss with no hard plastic that are designed to break easily before they can be used as a weapon.

It's not clear if that has satisfied the prisoners. The lawsuit has not been dropped.

An episode of the science TV show "Mythbusters" a few years ago set up an experiment to challenge the floss-as-security-risk theory. The show used a floss-equipped robot to test whether floss — combined with toothpaste to make it more abrasive — could really saw through a bar on a jail cell.

The feat was declared "plausible," given 300 days at eight hours a day — the kind of time that an inmate might have.

Regulations of prison floss vary around the country.

In northeastern Texas, officials believe Antonio Lara used dental floss and toothpaste to saw his way out of a cell at a county jail and kill a gang rival in 2000.

"We do not carry traditional dental floss because of security concerns," said Jason Clark, spokesman for the Coffield Unit near Palestine, Texas. "Floss can be used to make ropes, weapons, cut through bars, even just reinforce the grip on a shank."

Instead, inmates are allowed plastic holders with a small piece of floss stretched across, he said.

In California, the state approves Floss Loops. Regular floss can be used as a garrote, said Terry Thornton, spokeswoman for the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation.

"But for that matter, you can pull thread from your socks or bed linens to choke someone. It's not just razor blades and toothbrush shanks in prison. We've seen underwear used as a weapon."

New York's state prison system permits dental floss, but only the unwaxed variety. The waxed is "much stronger," said spokesman Peter Cutler. He said prison security officials have banned it after having "experience" with the waxed variety. He would not elaborate.

The Westchester jail does ban toothpicks and water picks; inmates are allowed to have a 3-inch-long toothbrush, Pruyn said. Kayser said he also makes a "rubber-type" flexible toothbrush that's 4 ¼ inches long, but said anything longer could be fashioned into a weapon.

It was waxed floss that was used in Wisconsin in 1997 by inmates Timothy Dummer and Guy Dunwald. They used ropes of braided floss to get over a wall at the Green Bay Correctional Institution. They were quickly recaptured and had five years added to their sentences.

A television story about the episode said the prisoners had collected 18,975 feet — more than 3½ miles — of dental floss.

In 1994, Robert Shepard used a floss rope braided as a telephone cord to scale an 18-foot wall at the South Central Regional Jail in West Virginia. He was on the lam for about five weeks. He was already being disciplined for scraping away the mortar between bricks in his cell.

In 1991, three inmates bought hundreds of yards of dental floss from the store at the Hays County Jail in Illinois and turned it into a ladder of sorts.

"It was ingenious," said U.S. Attorney Gerald Carruth when the men pleaded guilty to attempted escape. "They made the rope out of dental floss and used cardboard salt-and-pepper containers for stirrups on the ladder. ... That dental floss is strong."

Prisoners sue to get dental floss, but jailers say it's a weapon

By JIM FITZGERALD

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — When a group of New York prisoners sued last month to demand access to dental floss, officials said they had to consider "security issues." As it turns out, jail — and jailbreak — history is tightly tangled with the stringy decay fighter.

In Texas, officials believe a prisoner used floss to cut his way out of his cell, jumped a fellow inmate and knifed him to death.

To resolve Google's penalty against this site (still going strong after 309 days) I've been forced to censor all 4,800 citations of slang use. With the penalty in place, there's simply no way to compete fairly with dictionaries that don't have citations. This also means that the 9,600 citations ready to be added to the site gather dust. My attempts to reach someone at Google to discuss the situation have been met with silence. I wish this had turned out differently, and I'm sorry. -- Walter (editor)
