A TASTE OF ENGLISH SUMMER (WHEN IT'S NOT RAINING!)

Stephen T. 1 Review(s)

As a Brit, who grew up drinking this wonderful concoction at Wimbledon and Henley, you should serve in a pitcher. Firstly add ice, half filling the pitcher, then the Pimms, followed by as many fruits of your choice, I love putting in raspberries and sliced strawberries. But the 2 most important and never changing ingredients, are many slices of cucumber and torn mint leaves. Having added them, fill to the brim with Sprite or 7up, do not add real lemonade. The confusion happens, because both Sprite and 7up are collectively called lemonade in the UK. Give a stir and serve in tall glasses with a slice of cucumber and a spring of mint. Cheers, bottoms up.

PIMMS CUP, THE BRITISH SUMMER DRINK

JANET I. 1 Review(s)

Oh no! Never ginger ale or 7-Up or anything like that. Having lived in Oxfordshire for years, the Brits make it in the following way, and by all means, make a pitcher! Fill glass or pitcher with enough ice to chill, add Pimms, fill rest with lemonade, add slices of strawberry and top it all with a slice of cucumber. Be warned, it's something you will enjoy all summer! Cheers!

THE PERFECT SUMMER DRINK.

David K. 1 Review(s)

The perfect summer drink. If you've never tried a Pimms cup, you owe it to yourself (you deserve it!) to try it. The perfect Pimms cup is the matter of much debate, but the important thing is that you use what the Limeys call "proper" lemonade, which is a slightly fermented version of 7up. I like using Pellegrino Limonata, or, if you're feeling daring, you can use Mike's Hard Lemonade or something similar. You'll also need an English cucumber (NOT optional in my book), and various other things that may not be easy to find (what's a "borage?"). Pimms is very much a SUMMER drink, to be drunk on a hot, uncomfortable day while watching cricket at Lord's, or worse, Headingly. But it is DIVINE. Get yerself a bottle and google yerself a good recipe and when it's hot, go at it!

Cordials offer a delicious burst of flavor and sweetness. Offering endless possibilities, cordials are spirits combined with botanicals or other flavoring agents, as well as a sweetener and sometimes coloring. They're ideal for sipping after a meal, spiking a tasty dessert and mixing into fun, colorful cocktails.

The sweetening requirement is what makes cordials distinct from dry flavored spirits such as gin. In the United States, where "cordial" and "liqueur" are used interchangeably, regulations require that they contain at least 2.5 percent sugar by weight and be made from "fruits, flowers, plants, or pure juices therefrom, or other natural flavoring materials, or with extracts" of those materials. In Europe, cordials refer to non-alcoholic drinks. We use the terms based on U.S. regulations.

The spirit base for cordials is often neutral, but it certainly doesn't have to be. A robust spirit like whiskey, for example, can mix beautifully with other flavoring agents. Common flavors include fruits ranging from stone fruit to citrus and berries to nuts, as well as coffee and chocolate and even aromatic spices and seeds. Some liqueurs include a touch of cream to round out the other tasty elements.

Regulations allow cordial producers creative license with not only the spirit and flavoring agent, but also how they're incorporated. Some add flavoring agents after distillation by one of several methods. Infusion involves steeping the flavor source; maceration entails more aggressive crushing of the flavor components before steeping; percolation pumps water or spirits over the ingredients to extract flavors. Finally, flavor can be added by compounding, simply adding the flavoring extract to the spirit. Heartier flavoring agents such as seeds and flowers may be distilled along with the distillate, often for the second distillation, similar to the gin-making process.

Cream liqueurs require homogenization and other different mixing processes.

After producers marry flavoring agents with alcohol, they reduce the proof by adding water, which is sweetened and often colored. Sweetening agents include sugar, high-fructose corn syrup and honey. In some cases, producers use rectified grape must, a sugary, unfermented concentrated grape juice.
